

Cecilia Plays "Tommy Tucker" in Russia

"Sings for Her Supper" When Money's Bad.

To be paid in bread and sugar was the curious and not altogether comfortable experience of Miss Cecilia Hansen, the brilliant young Russian violinist who appears Thursday at the Brandeis, when she toured her native Russia under the soviet regime.

"I was like little Tommy Tucker who sang for his supper. The government felt that artists must live," explains Miss Hansen, who is to play in the final offering of the Tuesday Musicals, "and all fees were paid in produce. It was all a part of the involved, hopeless situation which existed in Russia at the time when I finally got out of the country. There were few concerts. In the sense that a musical program was presented there were practically none at all. Most of the time I was forced to play on mixed bills. There were clowns and jugglers and little plays and dances and monologists and acrobats and even trained animals—and somehow in this collection of entertainers I would be inserted.

"Money fluctuated constantly; what was good in the morning might be of doubtful value in the evening. A pound of sugar was a pound of sugar, its nutritive value did not change. Perhaps the officials were wiser than they suspected when they paid us in sugar or eggs or butter.

"I have sometimes wondered whether there was a scale of food, corresponding to the music which we played. The Tchaikovsky concerto, for instance, would have more sugar than a group of shorter pieces. At any rate, this strange system of remuneration was a safeguard against starvation. But I am glad that I no longer have to get my groceries from the stage manager."

Miss Hansen is now making her second American tour, going this year to the Pacific coast, which she will visit for the first time.

Fine Arts Presents Princess Tuesday

Princess Cantacuzene

Princess Cantacuzene, who will lecture before the Omaha Society of Fine Arts on Tuesday, March 10, 4 p. m., Brandeis theater, will give an account of her social experiences on both side of the Atlantic, and will discuss the many notables she has met in the course of her eventful career. Her lecture will be entitled "My Life, Here and There."

Before her marriage in 1839 to Prince Michael Cantacuzene, head of a famous Russian family, Princess Cantacuzene bore the name of Julia Dent Grant, her father, the late Frederick Dent Grant, having been a son of General U. S. Grant, leader of the northern armies in the civil war and afterwards president of the United States. She was born at the White House in Washington during her grandfather's presidency.

In 1858, after being presented to society, the princess lived for some time in Washington. During the war with Spain in that year her father received the appointment of military commander of Porto Rico. Several men who afterwards became famous were then coming to the front, including Theodore Roosevelt. In her lecture Princess Cantacuzene gives her early impressions of these celebrities.

Fine Arts Society. Three lectures will be given by Walter Pach, well-known writer and lecturer on art, in the galleries of the public library, under the auspices of the Society of Fine Arts. The first, given this afternoon at 4, on the subject "Greek Sculpture Before Phidias," will be illustrated. This is the third successive year of Mr. Pach's appearance before the society. He has recently published a book "Masters in Modern Art." He has lectured in most of the art museums of the country and comes to us from Cleveland, where he lectured at the Cleveland Museum of Art. Every year he gives a series of lectures at the Metropolitan museum in New York. The second lecture will be given Wednesday, March 11, at 4. Subject, "Greek Sculpture from Phidias to the End." The third lecture on Thursday, March 12, at 4 will be on "Gothic Sculpture." Lectures are free to the public. A group of modern Japanese prints by Hasui Kawase and Shinsui Ite are on exhibition at the public library under the auspices of the Omaha Society of Fine Arts. The Japanese have long held the supremacy in the printing of color plates, and this exhibition proves that Japanese print making is still alive in modern Japan. The exhibit will remain until March 29. To cut citron or candied peel for cakes, puddings, etc., steam until tender and pass through a food chopper.
