Arch Criminal, Under Death Sentence, Carefully Guarded in Old Weathersfield Prison, Where He Will Die on Gallows June 25-Nerve Is Unbroken.

Hartford, Conn., April 5 .-Guarded like a bottle of his own nitroglycerin in old Wethersfield prison, Gerald Chapman today returned to the normal routine of the life behind walls that he has known for 14 of the last 18 years. In his new condemned man's cell

Chapman was the same cold-eyed, comindividual that passed through the ordeal of a terrific trial. He remarked laconically: "I didn't get the breaks. State's Attorney Alcorn did. That's all. "It looks like a tough wriggle, but I am not yet out for the count. And if the worst comes to the worst, I can die without fear Strange, I like life, but am not in the least afraid of death."

Reads Anatole France.

Guards pacing ceaselessly before Chapman's cell reported the convicted murderer of Policeman James Skelly slept his usual six hours and enjoyed the customary prison breakfast. Then he turned to his pet passion, reading. An hour after breakfast he was deep in Anatole France's "Revolt of the Angels." He asked also for other books from the prison library.

His unbreakable nature was shown by an incident today. Hearing that Chapman once had Roman Catholic affiliations, prominent Catholics in Hartford sent a silver crucifix to Weathersfield through Chapman's lawyer. It was beautifully wrought, flanked by angels and hung upon a long chain of silver. Declines Cruciflx.

The lawyer told Chapman of the offer. The prisoner remarked in tone of finality: "Very pretty, I am sure, but please be good enough to return it to the gentlemen who sent it, with my thanks." Then apparently recalling that it was Palm Sunday and the beginning of holy week, he added with a satirical smile: "You know I am not the repentant thief." Repentant thief-not Chapman. Those who knew him best say the bandit will go to the gallows with no attempt whatsoever to awake the usual mawkish sentimentality. There will be no "sob stuff" about can prevent it. Escape from grim old Wethersfield seems a practical impossibility for Chapman. The walled buildings are set in a cove in the Con-

"Tough Stir to Spring." "As the men of the underworld say: 'Wethersfield is a tough stir to spring.' Chapman's own mental analysis of the trial and the evidence that convicted him was obtained by Uniersal Service through an attorney who talked to him after the verdiet. Chapman said:

"That little waitress, Lillian Knell, was believes by the jury." Lillian, 17-year-old, lisped out an identification of Chapman and Shean as the men who had stayed at the Old Colony Inn in Meriden five miles from the scene of the murder on the night of Saturday, October 11. Chapman said:

"That little girl's testimony outweighed my alibi. Also, it made believe all of Shean's It is rather curious, isn't it, that the great Gerald Chapman should be handed over to the gallows through a village waitress." Lillian Swayed Juror.

Strange to say, a member of the jury said today little Lillian had done more than any single witness to convict the bandit, with the pos sible exception of the two men who saw Chapman fleeing from the New Britain store. Chapman has but one possible avenue of escape. This lies in the admitted resourcefulness of his partner in crime of years, George (Dutch) Anderson. They met in Sing Sing 12 years ago, developed warm mutual admiration and remained together, so far as engagements with the law permitted un til the morning of January 17, last, when Chapman was surrounded by police officers in Muncie, Ind., and overpowered.

Strange lights recently have been observed in the lonely South Hadley (Mass.) house which Chapman and Anderson bought from a minister for the purpose of establishing headquarters for their crime syndicate. Apprehension of neighbors has communicated itself even to Walter E. Shean, Chapman's confederate, who turned against him.

Gerald Chapman's final earthly Shean, it is said, fears the fate of a squealer. However, State's tableaux, not if Gerald Chapman Attorney Alcorn said today the law will protect Shean, for he, Alcorn, intends to see that a substantial jail sentence is given Shean, who admits he accompanied Chapman necticut river, some three miles on the New Britain foray,
