

Fliers to Race for North Pole

Planes and Airship From Different Expeditions Will Compete in Long Trip.

London, April 7.—An air race for the north pole was in the making today between Capt. Ronald Amundsen and Grettir Algarsson. It will be run in May, if both explorers continue their present plans.

Algarsson will leave Liverpool May 1 aboard the ship Iceland, and hopes to reach the edge of the polar ice within two weeks. There he will inflate the special airship that the ship will carry and with three companions hopes to make the flight to the pole in 12 hours. His plan at the pole is to descend from the airship by rope ladders and after making observations to continue his flight to Nome, Alaska.

Amundsen's expedition is en route to Spitzbergen, hoping to take off in two airplanes before the end of May. Algarsson has speeded up his preparations, hoping to reach the pole before Amundsen.

Rock Island Back Taxes

Tendered Minus Interest

Pawnee City, Neb., April 7.—Pending agreement between the attorney general of Nebraska and the Rock Island railroad tax commissioner, a check for $20,867.48 has been made here and the railroad office in Chicago. The check is in payment for 1923 and 1924 taxes levied on the 32.82 miles of railroad in Pawnee county, and its nonacceptance here is due to failure to include interest.

On the advice of the county attorney the treasurer held the check when tendered and secured an opinion from the attorney general at Lincoln. The railroad has now taken the matter up with the state official.

Miss Brash Back From Tour.

Beatrice, April 7.—Miss Margaret Brash of this city, who has been touring Europe for some months with her aunt, Mrs. G. E. Brash, and daughter, Miss Katherine, has arrived in this country and will return to Beatrice, where she will spend the summer with her aunt, Mrs. C. G. Baker. Mrs. Brash and Miss Katherine will not return until fall.

last he was so near the drummer that he moved very slowly and carefully. He wanted to see without being seen. He was fearful that should Thunderer suspect he was being watched he would become shy and refuse to drum.

Peter was looking for a log. He expected to find Thunderer on a log. But when at last he saw Thunderer the latter was standing on a big rock and there was no log in sight.

"His drumming log must be behind that rock and he has jumped up there for a look around," thought Peter. "When he goes back to that log to drum I'll peep around that rock and watch him."

Peter's thoughts were interrupted by the boom, boom of the beginning of that thunder roll that had brought him over there, and it was so loud that at first he was startled. He wondered if without realizing it he had turned his head and Thunderer had gone back to his drumming log. But he hadn't. There was Thunderer

When the long roll ended Thunderer appeared to listen for a few minutes.

The Grouse with his neck stretched high, his handsome black ruff spread out, and his wings—well, his wings were moving so fast that Peter could not really see them. Thunderer was drumming and he was doing it right there on that rock before Peter's eyes. What was more, that drumming was just as loud and just as clear as ever Peter had heard it from an old log.

When the long roll ended Thunderer appeared to listen for a few minutes. Then he spread his stout wings and whirled away over the treetops, leaving Peter to scratch first one long ear with a long hind foot and then the other long ear with the other long hind foot. Peter's ideas were more upset than ever. He found out that Thunderer didn't have to have a hollow log on which to drum, and now that he didn't have to have a log at all. "He drums just as well on a rock as on a log," muttered Peter.

All that day he spent watching Thunderer whenever he was to be found by his drumming. And so it was that once Peter found him drumming on neither log nor rock, but on the ground, and his drumming was just as good as ever Peter heard it. "He is a drummer without a drum," thought Peter, as he watched, trying to see just how Thunderer managed to make all that noise.

Drumming Without a Drum.
"All my life I have believed that Thunderer the Grouse drums by beating a hollow log with his wings," muttered Peter Rabbit to himself as he sat in the dear old Briar Patch thinking over what he had seen in the Green Forest the day before. "I was told that when I was a little fellow and until yesterday I never once doubted it. But that log Thunderer was drumming on yesterday isn't hollow, and because it isn't hollow and is covered with moss Thunderer might pound it with his wings until they were broken without making a noise worth mentioning. Cousin Jumper the Hare says Thunderer doesn't always do his drumming on a log, so of course a log doesn't have anything to do with the noise. I supposed that Thunderer always uses a log, but if Jumper says he doesn't I suppose he doesn't."

Just then Peter's long ears picked up a faint, long, low rumble like distant thunder. It came from the Green Forest. It was the drumming of Thunderer. Peter looked around cautiously to make sure that little Mrs. Peter wasn't about. Then he started for the Green Forest, lipperty-lipperty-lip. His white powderpuff of a tail bobbed up, down, up, down, as he scampered as fast as those long legs could take him.

When he reached the Green Forest he sat up and waited with his long ears wide open. He was listening. Presently he heard that long thunder roll, and once more started on. At
