Fire, Grocery Trucks Crash: Driver Is Hurt

Machines Meet at Street Intersection; Smaller Car Demolished; Man Hurled 10 Feet.

With a crash that could be heard for blocks, a fire truck collided with a Ben Reinschreiber grocery truck driven by Edward Simonson at Thirty-fourth and Mason streets Thursday morning at 10:45. The delivery truck, a mass of tangled wreckage, was hurled 15 feet into Turner park by the impact. Simonson was tossed 10 feet into the air, according to witnesses. He was hurried to Lord Lister hospital, where his condition is said to be serious.

After striking the lighter machine the fire truck ran up over the curbing and was finally brought to a stop on the edge of a slight embankment to the sunken garden of the park. The fire truck was from Station No. 10 at Twenty-ninth street and Creighton avenue. It was answering a call to Thirty-fourth and Leavenworth streets, where a weed fire was re ported burning in the rear of an oil

Driver Attempts Leap.

Simonson had started across the intersection when he saw the heavy fire truck bearing down upon him from the steep hill on Mason street, between Thirty-third and Thirty fourth street. He attempted to leap from his machine, but as he poiser himself the fire engine, driven by John Bougatz, struck his truck.

Simonson was tossed into the air and his machine was knocked into efforts to prevent his truck from turtling and finally stopped it with its front wheels over the slight embankment into the park.
