WAGWORKER

WILL M. MAUPIN, EDITOR

Published Weekly at 137 No. 14th St., Lincoln, Neb. One Dollar a Year.

Entered as second-class matter April 21, 1904, at the postoffice at Lincoln, Neb., under the Act of Congress of March 3rd, 1879.

"Printers' Ink," the recognized authority on advertising, after a thorough investigation on this subject, says: "A labor paper is a far better advertising medium than an ordinary newspaper in comparison with circulation. A labor paper, for example, having 2,000 subscribers is of more value to the business man who advertises in it than an ordinary paper with 12,000 subscribers."

THE BOISE TRIAL.

The jury that will try Frank Haywood at Boise has at last been secured, the opening statements of counsel for the prosecution and for the defense have been made, and the taking of testimony is now under way. The Wage-worker believes now that Haywood and his confederates will have a fair trial. Not because there is any disposition on the part of the prosecution to play fair, but because they are afraid to do otherwise in view of the deep interest manifested in the case by the millions of union men throughout the country. No one who has followed this case from its inception with intelligent discrimination will have the hardihood to deny that the first intention was to railroad Haywood, Moyer and Pettibone to the gallows. The men behind the prosecution little reckoned that organized labor would be so unanimous in demanding a "square deal." They figured that there would be some outcry at the start, and that attention would be diverted and union forces divided by cheap political claptrap, just as it has been a thousand times before. But organized labor is learning its lessons rapidly. It is getting together more solidly than ever before in its history. The Moyer-Haywood case will have been well worth while if it teaches the lesson that organized labor means something more than merely standing together for better wages and shorter hours by contract agreement; that it means standing together politically and socially as well as industrially.

The prosecution has promised wonderful things. It remains to be seen whether it can deliver the goods. Twelve men will say whether he is guilty or innocent, but that verdict, whatever it is, must be in accord with the verdict that will be rendered by an unbiased and intelligent public whose millions of members are going to follow that evidence as the evidence in no other murder case was ever followed.

DECLINED WITH THANKS.

An advertising agency last week offered to The Wage-worker a contract for advertising a local plumbing concern, the contract amounting to $36 for twelve months. Like most labor papers The Wage-worker needs money, but it did not need it badly enough to accept the proffered contract, for it was an advertisement for a non-union plumbing concern. This concern, like several others in Lincoln, has several former members of the Plumbers' Union in its employ. They were bamboozled into becoming "partners" in the business, and they bit at the bait. The Wage-worker could add not less than $1,000 a year to its advertising receipts if it would consent to advertise non-union concerns, but it would lose a lot more than that. In addition to losing the support of union men and women, it would lose its own self-respect.

If there is a manufacturing industry in Lincoln that employs union labor, The Wage-worker will do everything it can to boost its business and the concern need not carry a dollar's worth of advertising unless it wants to do so. But there are manufacturing concerns in Lincoln that could not buy advertising space in The Wage-worker at any price.

We boost, but the hooster demands that the boost be "square."

What's the matter with the conductors and motormen of the "White Line?" The company is actually advertising the fact that it does not oppose the unionizing of its employees.

The National Manufacturers' Association is going to raise a fund of a million and a half to "oppose trades union oppression." That will not provide carfare for the men who are entrusted with that little job of union busting. A little bunch of printers raised three times that much and put the Job-McIntyre bunch of printer-busting boys out of commission in a year. The National Manufacturers' Association will have to corral the per capita circulation before it can make a dent.

The United States supreme court has decided that dredgemen engaged on government work are "seamen," and do not, therefore, come under the provisions of the eight hour law. Would the grave and reverend justices decide that a jackass with a mountain howitzer on its back is a battleship?

Read the new advertisement of "Red Seal" overalls, manufactured by the R. L. McDonald Co., of St. Joseph, Mo. Every garment bears the union label, and no better overalls are made anywhere on earth. Call for "Red Seal" overalls and help yourselves by helping your fellow unionists.

President Van Cleave of the National Manufacturers' Association believes in child labor under "proper restrictions." By "proper restrictions" he means that no child under two years should be allowed to work more than twelve hours a day nor receive over $1.13 a week.

This is the season of the year when the employer who complains about the "exactions of the unions" goes away to the mountains or seashore for the summer, while the employe stays at home and swelters through the summer to keep his wife and babies from starving.

The union man who favors Secretary of War Taft for president would do well to get his unionism on straight and then read up a bit on injunctions. Taft is the original "injunction judge," and he always played into the hands of the exploiters of labor.

Talk about "boosting the label." The printers made such a hot fight on the Barnum & Bailey circus for using "scab" printing that the "greatest show on earth" came down just like the historic coon, mentioned by Davy Crockett.

If every union man and woman in the country would for one year refuse to buy anything that did not bear a union label, the battle for unionism and recognition thereof would be won without a strike or a lock-out.

The Lincolnite who rides on the Lincoln Distraction Co., lines when he can get within reaching distance of his destination on the "White Line" is guilty of criminal assault on the best interests of Lincoln.

Tenements and filthy sweat shops do not flourish in communities where labor is well organized. Business failures are comparatively few in communities where labor is organized, well paid and well content.

Several Lincoln manufacturers who are violently opposed to trades unions are complaining because Lincoln unionists do not buy their "scab" wares. Wouldn't that tickle your risibilities?

Public Printer Shillings, the "open shop" advocate, is reducing the forces in the big printery, and strange to relate the officers of the different allied crafts were among the first ones "laid off."

The brewery workers need not foam at the mouth over President Gompers' drastic action. They should make some quick hops around and get square.

Riches

When Dean died the general public paid little attention. A few whom he met every day merely paused a moment when they heard the news and said:

"Dean dead? Well, that's too bad." Then they passed on. A few others paused a little longer and some of them said:

"He was a poor manager, and never saved any money. He left nothing when he died. Wonder what his family will do?"

But Dean did not die poor. He left behind him a legacy of riches that even a Rockefeller might envy.

He left behind the memory of a man who never saw human soul in distress that he did not try to comfort it. Scores of men revere his memory because Dean sacrificed his own comfort more than once to feed them and to help keep their little ones from want. Widows of his comrades remember him gratefully, for his hand was always ready to help them. His every daily walk was a streak of sunshine in dark places, for his ready smile, his quick sympathy and his helpfulness scattered cheer wherever he went.

He left his family well provided for, because he laid up treasures in the hearts of men, and they will see to it that Dean's widow and children shall never suffer want. He was possessed of neither gold nor jewels when he died, but he was possessed of that which is more precious than gems or much fine gold—he had the love and respect of his neighbors and comrades. He left his children the legacy of an untarnished name and a memory of a father's constant love and care. To his widow he left the knowledge that he was loved by all who knew him because he was a good husband, a good citizen and a good father.

Such a man as Dean always dies richer than a Croesus. He laid up treasures upon which not only his family can draw through the years to come, but upon which he can draw through all the ages to come.
