R. S. YOUNG BUILDING SUPPLY COMPANY.

The R. S. Young Building Supply company, whose office is located at 1342 O street, is one of Lincoln's pioneer business firms. There are wholesale and retail dealers in coal the disconsolate-looking young man. and building material, artificial buildcement, Plymouth plaster, sand white brier pipe. "It never happened to you stone cement, pressed brick, fire clay, stone sewer tile and masons' supplies. This firm has the welfare of Lincoln thing like that is going to happen to a at heart and they have assisted in | man? many ways in its advancement. In this review of business firms we wish to give prominent mention to the R. S. Young Building Supply company.

THE MUSICIANS.

Take Cognizance of the Automobile Show With Its "Kid" Band.

The Musicians' Union did not fur nish any members of the band that used to." 'played" at the automobile show this week. The union musicians asked for I'ving wages, so the management secured the services of a boys' band that received as much for four days' work I've had lots of other misfortunes. as the musical union band would have received for one day's services.

"We don't buy automobiles," said one union musician, "so we are not worth considering. But we do buy other things. We'll remember the au- warm. I don't mean to say that's temobile show."

"I believe the union balls are better attended, now that we furnish them with union made music," said another member.

And it does look like it.

SEEM FORGETFUL.

Lincoln motormen who are rendered comparatively comfortable during cold weather by the car vestibules memingly forget that they owe this comfort to the trades unions. The unions of Omaha and Lincoln forced the legislature to enact a "vestibule law," and although the traction companies of the two cities fought it bitturly the law stood. Senator Frank anybody you ever saw. Why? and fought it to victory. The fight now Lincoln motormen "snitch" by enpaigning in the interests of the wageenrners.

"I don't suppose that particular thing would happen very often," said the philosopher with the brier pipe, "but in a general way misfortunes will happen and after awhile you get used to them. You can get used to anything, and once you do get used to it Mr. J. O. Greusel, who is trying to you don't mind it. You won't get it, and when it bappens you won't say much more than 'That's what I expected.' So the old man bunkoed you,

"Yes, sir," replied the young man,

"You'll get used to that," said the philosopher. "You won't mind it nearly so much after you've been hunting it a week or two. I knew a fellow once who was fired from almost every job he got. The first time he felt mighty bad about it and went around thinking he was disgraced, but in a year from then if he stayed a month in one place and wasn't fired he'd quit anyway. It's all what you're sneered the young man. "I couldn't say," replied the philosopher. "I never tried it myself, but lost a pair of overshoes yesterday. I guess I've lost more pairs of overshoes than anybody else in the coun try. I take them off somewhere and then go away and leave 'em, and forget where. You see, my feet get too anything serious, but it's happened to me so often that I hardly notice it now. I just go and buy me another pair of overshoes. But I can remem-ber the first pair I lost and I was sick over it.

"Maybe you didn't have the money to go and buy you another pair in them days," suggested the young

"That may be true, too," said the philosopher. "But you can get used to being without money. It's inconvenient, but it's inconvenient to go without eating for a meal or two. You can get used to that and be the better for it. When you talk about eating there's the things that you cat. I can eat more burned steak and sour, heavy bread and not mind it than Ransom of Douglas introduced the bill cause I live out where you can't hire a cook for love or money. Even the cost the unions a lot of money, and poor ones quit, and I've got so used to their quitting that it doesn't put me out. We have to bear things which joying the protection and refusing to are very painful to us at first, but help pay the expenses of further cam- our feelings get blunted. Perhaps, too, our troubles are imaginary to a great extent. I saw a lumber-jack who'd just been paid off sit down in a restaurant and after looking all over the bill-of-fare order pork and

"I won't call for any more deals like I got," said the young man. "You can bet on that."

"You'll get married some of these days, I shouldn't wonder," pursued the philosopher. "But you'll get used to that. After ten or twelve years of it you'll hardly murmur. Yes, trouble comes to all of us, but we get casehardened to it. Things that hurt us like the mischief at first we get so we don't notice."

"I know one thing that hurts like the mischlef at first and you don't get used to it, either."

"What's that?" "A mustard plaster," replied the young man.
