THE OLD GRAVE STONE

Illustrating the Immortality of Good Deeds.

(By Hans Christian Andersen.)

In a little provincial town, in the time of the year when the people say "the evenings are drawing in," there was one evening quite a social gathering in the home of a father of a family. The weather was still mild and warm. The lamp gleamed on the table; the long curtains hung down in folds before the open windows, by which stood many flower pots and outside, beneath the dark blue sky, was the most beautiful moonshine. But they were not talking this. They were talking about ing of this. They were talking about in the courtyard, close by the kitchen door, and on which the maids often laid the clean copper kitchen utensils that they might dry in the sun, and where the children were fond of playing. It was, in fact, an old grave-stone.

"Yes," said the master of the house, "I believe the stone comes from the old convent churchyard, for from the church yonder the pulpit, the memorial boards and the gravestones were sold. My father bought the latter, and they were cut in two to be used as paving stones; but that old stone was kept back, and has been lying in courtyard ever since."

"One can very well see that it is a gravestone," observed the eldest of the children; "we can still decipher in it an hour glass and a piece of an angel but the inscription which stood below it is quite effaced, except that you may read the name Preben, and a great S close behind it, and a little farther down the name of Martha. But nothing more can be distinguished, and even that is only plain when it has been raining, or when we have washed the stone."

"On my word, that must be the gravestone of Preben Schwane and his wife!"

These words were spoken by an old man; so old that he might well have been the grandfather of all who were present in the room.

"Yes, they were one of the last pairs who were buried in the old churchyard of the convent. They were an honest old couple. I can remember them from the days of my boyhood. Everyone knew them, and everyone esteemed them. They were the oldest pair here in the town. The people declared they had more than a tub full of gold; and yet they went about very plainly dressed, in the coarsest stuffs, but always with splendidly clean linen. They were a fine old pair, Preben and Martha! When both of them sat on the bench at the top of the steep stone stairs in front of the house, with the old linden tree spreading its branches above them, and nodded at one in their kind gentle way, it seemed quite to do one good. They were very kind to the poor; they fed them and clothed them, and there was judgment in their benevolence and true Christianity. The old woman died first; that day is still quite clear before my mind. I was a little boy, and had accompanied my father over there, and we were just there when she fell asleep. The old man was very much moved, and wept like a child. The corpse lay in the room spoke to my mother, and to a few spoke to my mother, and to a few neighbors who were there, and said how lonely it would be now in his house, and how good and faithful she (his dead wife) had been, how many years they had wandered together through life, and how it came about that they came to know each other and to fall in love. I was, as I have told you, a boy and only stood by and listened to what the others said; but it filled me with quite a strange emotion to listen to the old man, and to watch how his cheeks gradually flushed red when he spoke of the
