Might compare them with other clothes, might see how much more they offer for the money, how well they represent the very features a man wants in his clothes--stylish cut, good looks, fine needle-craft and tailoring, shape-retaining construction.

Armstrong Clothes, while better, cost less than other clothes.

The reason they cost less than other clothes is that it is the policy of the Armstrong store to sell better clothes for the money than any other store wants to.

WIFE CHOSEN BY REFERENDUM

Spanish Magazine Discovers Which Princes Should Have Alfonso

Allowing the people to settle who is to be your wife, by a referendum vote, would hardly be possible anywhere else than in Spain. The Spanish people very generally admire their young king and are quite anxious he shall marry the most eligible young woman in Europe. "An enterprising illustrated magazine in Madrid," says the Chicago Post, "recently instituted a vote to show the preference of its readers for a wife for King Alfonso. In the voting Princess Edna of Battenberg was a strong favorite, emerging from the test with 30,128 votes. Princess Patricia of Connaught was favored by 21,236 voters and Princess Louise of Orleans by 3,002. What could be more practical than this mode of settling a question? The Diario Ilustrado in a spirit of patriotism presents a page of magnificent half tone portraits of the eligible princesses of Europe, with a sufficient statement of their merits, political and personal. It calls upon the public to express its choice. The public—or that part of it that reads the Diario and has time to vote—sends in its preference. The Diario notifies the ministry: "The people have spoken, and by the glorious and infallible test of the referendum the Princess Ena is selected to be Queen of Spain. Postscript: Please inform the king at your early convenience."
