Subject "Care of Healthy Hair"

At certain times of the year, as most everyone has noticed, animals "shed their hair". The hair drops out by the handful, and the animal's coat is greatly thinned.

At the same time that the old hair falls out the new hair comes in, and soon the animal's coat is as thick as ever.

I human beings there is, instead of a seasonal shedding of the hair, a constant falling, and a new growth replacing the loss although at certain seasons this process may be more active than at other seasons.

This natural falling comes about because the hair loosens from its papilla, and mounts, or it is forced into the middle region of the follicle, from which precarious post of attachment, it is brushed or combed out or it merely drops off.

If the rate of replacement can keep pace with the rate of loss, the individual will naturally have a fine crop of hair, as long as he has any use for hair.

But to maintain this condition is a problem. Often it is an unsolvable one. This is especially true if there is a hereditary tendency towards baldness, or toward premature loss of hair.

I would therefore, urge upon mothers the necessity of giving careful attention to the condition of the scalp in their children, so that proper exercise, and nutrition of the hair follicle is interceded with, or unfavorably influenced from any cause.

This early attention to the needs of the scalp will be what I might call prophylactic or preventive, not only to keep the scalp in a healthy condition, but also to prevent the development of any parasitic trouble that might, later on, cause the loss of hair.

Hair of children, should be washed, combed, brushed and cleaned. Hair of women and men should be combed, brushed and washed, scalp massaged, and mechanical stimulation.

To maintain the scalp in the best condition of cleanliness, it is not necessary to wash or shampoo the hair with too great a degree of frequency. It is not advisable for women to wash the hair often than once every week, or ten days, and for men not more than two or three times weekly.

Yours very truly,
R. C. PRICE.
