CASE OF MISS GRAY

By JANE OSBORN

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) (WNU Service)

IN SPITE of his twenty-eight years, Doctor Morley looked very young; in spite of his youthful appearance and the fact that he had been practicing medicine only two or three years, he was one of the busiest and best-liked doctors in Tilden. One of the older doctors had suggested in all seriousness that he raise a moustache. That would make him look older and more professional. Not such a bad idea, thought Ted Morley, until he suggested it to Hope Gray, the girl in spotless white linen who acted as general assistant in his office. Hope pursed her lips, looked critically at Ted's smooth face and said she liked him better as he was. That settled the matter.

The only time that Ted really felt the need of an appearance of greater age was when he was acting as chairman of the committee of student nurses at the Tilden hospital. The fact was, he was somewhat in awe of Miss Drury, the middle-aged matron of the hospital, and on leaving the hospital after visiting his patients there, he had a strong impulse to hurry past her private office without giving her an opportunity to confer with him.

One summer's day he was making—or trying to make—one of his hasty exits from the hospital when Miss Drury pounced upon him. "Sorry to detain you," she said, accusingly. "But there's the case of Miss Gray. It was six months ago the matter was first presented and we have done nothing about it. It would be quite out of order for me to go ahead with the matter myself. A new class will be coming in next month—we really ought to let her know."

"To be sure," said Ted Morley, and said something about having intended to get in touch with the girl, and something more about having been extremely busy.

"You see she applied for appointment in the training school. She has no high-school diploma—and in such cases candidates have to satisfy the chairman of the committee of their educational fitness. I would suggest that you send for the girl and have her go to your office where you can make whatever inquiries you want. She lives somewhere in the country—a copy of the letter is included in this memo."

A few more remarks and Ted Morley managed to get started. Disagreeable business that. He thrust the letter in his pocket, hurried to his car and back by the shortest way to his office. He was especially anxious to arrive before Hope left for the day. If he had the courage, he wanted to asked Hope to marry him. He was quite equal to the ordeal he felt Miss Drury nashed him—now he felt timid.

Somewhat his courage came back as he entered his office and saw Hope sitting there at his desk with her pretty fair head bent over one of his medical magazines.

They sat opposite each other with the broad flat desk between them and Ted took the telephone receiver from his hook so there might be no interruption in the important business he had before him.

Then leaning over her desk and looking earnestly into her fair young face he told her he wanted to marry her. He waited half expecting Hope would present a final rejection then said there, looked, looking rather confused, she told him that it was rather rash for him to propose marriage to a girl of whom he knew nothing.

"I'm not even a nurse," she said. "They didn't think I knew enough—they wouldn't have me."

"But after what I have seen of some nurses," said Ted. "I'm glad you never took hospital training. Then you really did want to go into training?"

"Ever since I was a little girl that had been my ambition," said Hope. "You see my mother was dead—and father had quite a bit of money. I never spoke of that before. I said I lived on a farm—so I do, in a way. Father calls it an estate—but I go and come in the bus. Well, I never went to high school, just somehow managed to get a smatter here and there from governesses and tutors. I got father to consent to my taking the hospital training—but apparently they didn't want me—so I saw your advertisement—and you know the rest. I thought maybe I had better tell you about it—because—"

"Because then I would understand why you didn't want to marry me?" Hope put her two hands across the desk and clasped one of Ted's. "Of course I want to marry you—how could I help it?"

It was not until late that night that Ted remembered the memorandum from Miss Drury that he had thrust in his pocket. He glanced quickly through the letter written six months ago and at the end he saw the signature. "Hope Gray."

REV. ALBERT KUHN, WHITE MINISTER, ADVISES OMAHA NEGROES. 'ORGANIZE AND STAND TOGETHER,'—HE SAYS

I believe it lies entirely in your power to remove some of the undeserved, unjust, unchristian and humiliating restrictions which have been placed upon your economic, political and cultural life, here in Omaha as everywhere in the United States.

I will mention a few of these handicaps and restrictions.

1. Colored citizens are too often passed over in the appointment of the working staff of the different departments of City and County government.

2. Local shops and stores who receive a large proportion of their trade often fail to return the favor by hiring a fair proportion of colored clerks.

3. Public Utilities like the Gas, Light, Water, Telephone, Street Car Service do not give to our colored people the share of employment which their patronage should entitle them to.

4. In at least two of our Public Schools in which colored children form a large percentage of the pupils half of the teaching positions including the position of principal should be given by the School Board to Colored Teachers. There is a super-abundance of the finest of teaching talent among colored College Graduates.

That some of these unfair and exasperating discriminations have persisted so long is not due entirely to the prejudice of more numerous white citizenship. A large percentage of your white fellow townsmen have enough of the Christian and human spirit that they are of one mind with you about the injustice of it all. They will both respect you and support you if you make a deliberate, intelligent and courageous fight for your rights. They will however not take the initiative. If you Negro citizens have not got "the guts" (if you will pardon this homely expression), of getting together and enforcing your demands they feel you are not worth the victory. The Whites had to fight and to suffer to gain democracy and their other civic rights; the women braved ridicule and persecution until their demands for political equality were heard; the laborers of Russia overthrew inequality and tyranny only through a fearless struggle. The trouble with you colored neighbors is that you did not have to fight hard enough yourself to become free from slavery in the days of Lincoln; that is why you are still halfway in the state of slavery. Your full emancipation waits for your own concerted and sacrificial efforts.

To win out in your struggle for equality you need neither brutal force nor money. You need the fearless, highminded courage of the eternal fidelity to a noble ideal, of Jesus, and, in modern times, of a Washington, Gandhi.

There ought to be somewhere in your midst a born, magnetic leader, who could pull you together, and lead you in persistent united action. He ought to be a man of such an inspiring personality that most of those who come in contact with him could not help but respect and like him, both Colored and Whites. He ought to be not so much a great orator as a great organizer, who could develop his people into a well disciplined, enthusiastic spiritual army; he should have nothing in common with those vain glorious, bombastic, selfseeking political tricksters, who pose as leaders at election time. Both White and Colored have their fill of such.

Under such leadership all colored churches, clubs, lodges should get busy to put before their members a program for the recognition of the rights of their race such as I outlined above. Care should be taken to be moderate in their demands so, that they will impress with their fairness and moderation even the white people.

They should then induce every colored man and woman in Omaha to sign a simple pledge something as follows:

"I express my belief in the aims of the OMAHA COLORED RIGHTS LEAGUE (or whatever title that organization may have). I hereby enlist in the League as a comrade and active member. I shall obey the orders of the leader of the League as long as it does not conflict with my conscience or with the laws of our Country. If for any reason I cannot continue such obedience I shall resign from the League."

After two thirds of the colored populations have identified themselves with the organizations, the leader, with a carefully selected group of assistants, can begin the struggle for the realization of the program.
