The coming of winter, as the National Safety Council points out, brings with it a number of varied and important accident hazards.

Carbon monoxide is one of the foremost. Motorists warm up their cars in closed garages—and the inevitable result is more unnecessary tragedies to add to the annual death toll.

Another field where winter brings an increase in fatalities is in hunting—nearly one-half of all firearms deaths each year occur from November to February. Careless or inexperienced sportsmen carry loaded guns in vehicles, leave them leaning against trees, draw them barrel foremost after them when crossing fences, shoot at moving, unseen objects, and so on. And the accident toll soars.

To most of us, winter driving presents the principal hazard. Streets are wet and ice-covered. Darkness comes early. Driving practices that are reasonably safe in the summer, become extremely dangerous. The condition of one's tires, brakes and windshield wiper is vastly more important than at any other time of the year.

Every motorist should have his car examined at the beginning of winter to make certain it is in good operating condition. Then he should remember that only 15 cent of car accidents can be laid to mechanical failure, and that in the balance the human element must bear the blame. The only course to pursue is to drive with a maximum of care under any and all conditions—and drive as little as possible when road and weather conditions are exceptionally bad.
