SEEING WHITE By A. B. Mann

(For The Literary Service Bureau) Often we hear the expression, "thinking white," which means thinking as a white man would think. It is questionable whether this is a thing of which to boast or not, since the worst destructiveness, in diabolical inventions, in literature effective in inciting immorality and crime is traceable to the brain of the white man. Moreover, examination of the brain, its structure and functions, will demonstrate that in it are no racial difference. If a black man should write a book or supply some other literary composition; "if he should deliver an address or sing a song; in these there could be found no difference, as compared with the productions of white men of the same class. This supports the contention that these differences are cultural and circumstantial rather than fundamental. 'Queer thing, this "seeing white!" (To be continued.)

"A special program of development for the Vicksburg Military Park, where one of the most important campaigns of the War between the States occurred in 1862 and 1863, is being planned by a staff of historical technicians working in cooperation with the landscape staff of the Office of National Parks. The object of this program is to present to visitors a complete story of the great military operations that took place in this part of the South when the Union Armies spent more than a year advancing on and besieging Vicksburg in an effort to divide the Confederacy and reopen free navigation from St. Louis to the sea. Their object was accompished on July 4 1863, when the Vicksburg garrison surrendered to General U. S. Grant, the day following General Lee's de-

(For the Literary Service Bureau) A little boy of three years likes music. He wants to bang on the piano all through the day. I was a guest in the home and did not try to conceal the fact that this banging annoyed me. When this child would climb up on the stool, at the piano. father or mother would say mildly, "Johnnie, get down and go away from the piano." "But I want to play," the child would counter. Perhaps the mother would say, mother is nervous and can't stand the noise." The child would wait perhaps three minutes and start again-

A little girl of the same family had roller skates. She'd wear them in the house to the detriment of the carpet. Her father would say, "I told you not to wear those skates in the house." The child would cease skating but keep the skates on. Then, after a few moments, she'd start again.

Term "War Between The States" Used in Government Press Release.

WASHINGTON, January 22-(C bels are in control of some of the press releases issued by the Department of the Interior," says one well known newspaper correspondent. He calls attention to the fact that the designation "Civi War" has been displaced for the use of the pet term of the Daughters of the Confederacy "War between the States," as shown by the following paragraph taken from a press release dated January 16, 1934:
