The best thing you can The whites of "Tobacco Road" are sensation on Broadway. But the the play has taken such a hold on papers. The critics beat it furiousthe consciousness of New York ly on the opening night and left it that artists have made its theme for dead. It got up, staggered a motif for cartoons in the ultra along and finally recuperated. Then Rose McClendon, the colored star, Will "Mulatto" really turn out took ill. Another blow that left it groggy. Predictions were again made that it would close. A white couldn't carry the role of the great Rose. But week after week passed and for a second time the wobbly legs of "Mulatto" grew firm and strong. It is still with us, now boasting proudly of its nine lives.

"Mulatto's" appeal is unique in these parts-stark sex realism between black and white in Dixie. Here, for the first time, is shown in the open the origin of the "high Yallers." Both sides come because they don't like it-the story. They come to hate and the box office, strangely unemotional, gloats. The publicity man puts still larger ads in the papers.
