

OMAHA CITY NEWS NOTES

Four work-study students of the Municipal University of Omaha have received raises during the five months they have been on their respective jobs, according to J. E. Woods, director of the Work-Study plan at the university.

The students who are "on the job" now will return to their classes in February, and students who have been in classes the first semester will take their places in business.

The Work-Study students are required to deposit a certain amount of money each month to cover their university costs for next semester. Over $1,500 has already been deposited, according to Mr. Woods. Another $700 will be deposited before the students leave their jobs.

There are fifteen students at work in business now, Mr. Woods pointed out.
