WORDS WITHOUT MUSIC By LOUIS REID (Music Features & Photo Syndicate)

WHO is the leading feminine writer of popular songs? If the number of popular hits to her credit is the basis of judgment it is Dorothy Fields. This young woman, the daughter of comedian Lew Fields, has authored in collaboration with Jerome Kern, Jimmy McHugh and others, more than a dozen of big song successes.

The most esteemed numbers from the Fields-McHugh workshop, written originally for the films, have been "Go Back and Tell Your Mother," "I'm in the Mood for Love," "Dinner at Eight" and the hitting "Thank You for a Lovely Evening." Later, with Jerome Kern, Miss Fields wrote that ingratiating little serenade, "The Way You Look Tonight."

Words have been set to Ferde Grofe's "Mississippi Suite" . . . Of all the piano teams none ever achieved the acclaim that was Ohman and Arden's . . . Though they have now gone their separate ways, they were the first in the field. Roxy and Gershwin gave them their start, the latter summoning them to play between the acts of his girl-and-music shows.

THE LOW DOWN FROM HICKORY GROVE

A shoe salesman he is maybe alright, vis, as a person. Most of 'em are nice to their wife, I reckon and maybe go to church or loan their lawnmower to their neighbor or do lots of things which shows he is O. K.—or fairly so.

But when it comes to giving you a shoe that fits, a shoe salesman, he is a de- mon. It is the last thing in he world he will ever do. He will even send to the factory to get one that will not fit. The more you pay you want one big enough, the harder he tries to give you something else.
