UNIVERSITY OF OMAHA COOPERATES WITH NORTH SIDE YWCA

When Miss DeLoris Jarmin, director of the North Omaha Community Theatre last season returned to the city two weeks ago and learned that her mother, Mrs. Jean Jarmin, director of Dramatics at the University of Omaha was producing the Broadway Three act Mystery Comedy success Post Road, her first concern was to give the players and patrons of her own North Omaha Theatre the opportunity to see this splendid production.

Miss Jarmin also took into consideration the splendid assistance extended by the North Side of YWCA. Much of the success enjoyed by members of the Little Theatre was attributed to the tireless assistance given by members of this institution. So now, for the University production of POST ROAD, Miss Jarmin, cognizant of this cooperation, has made it possible for the North Side YWCA to secure a percentage on all tickets sold from the North Side Headquarters. This gesture of courtesy given by the dramatic dept. of the Municipal University of Omaha is an endeavor to afford true community entertainment for its patrons and to lend financial assistance to the YWCA in its civic enterprises.

POST ROAD, written by Wilbur Danie Steele and Norma Mitchell, is a startling mystery comedy in three acts. After its sensational New York production, it became the vehicle for Charlotte Greenwood's Chicago production.

POST ROAD is the character sketch of a quizzical Connecticut Spinster who accommodates overnight tourists in her ancestral home on the Post Road. Late one stormy evening a dignified doctor appears and asks for shelter for his patient, her nurse himself and his chauffeur. In the morning there appears an added visitor, an infant and the mystery of it all leads Emily to believe that she is housing a band of kidnapers and kidnapped babe. During all this a sanctimonious clergyman, who has been warning Emily that she is entertaining suspicious characters turns out in fact to be a racketeer disguised as a holy man who has been planted for weeks in the inn for the purpose of preparing for way for his collaborators. Emily keeps her surmises to herself and secretly sets about to foil the extortioners. She humorously goes so far as to claim the infant as her own. Here follows a succession of events that are unsurpassed for their subtlety, mystery and good humor, until everything ends in a tumult with the state police shooting their way in, and the baffled conspirators scurrying for cover.

Here is a play which delighted Broadway for a whole season, and will keep you in an alternate state of excitement and merriment. "A shrewd and exciting melodrama. It cries 'surprise' time over time. Water tight tingling with suspense."—New York Sun.

Every effort is being taken to make this production the best of its kind. The students of the University long deprived of adequate stage facilities, are highly enthusiastic in the anticipation of producing their first big performance on the spacious and beautiful stage in the newly constructed University Building.

The following students have been chosen from an all school-try out and represent the finest dramatic talent in the University: Rita Burton, Barbara Laher, Julia Lane, Joe Dooley, William W. Peebles, Jr., Lee Alpersen, Bob Hunter, Elizabeth Ann Swanson, Richard Nicholson, William Morris, Frances Morris, Jane Pope, Esther Steinberg, Mary Ellen Gibson, Arthur Raeside, Charles G. Newton, Loucilla McNutt, Charles R. Nordin, Charles, John Knudsen, Bernice Vanneck, Esther Steinberg, Doris Jean Nelson, Kathryn, Lillian Mornovitz and Eileen Z-vitz.

Special interest to North Omaha Theatre patrons is the fact that Mr. Andrew T. Reed, well known for his splendid theatrical ability, will be in charge of the make up and lighting effects for the production.

Post Road will be presented one night only, November 18 in the University Auditorium, Municipal of Omaha at 8:30 P. M.

A large attendance is expected for this production; so it is advisable to procure your tickets early. Those people wishing to attend may secure their tickets for either production at the North side YWCA Building now.

PRESIDENT CLARK ADDRESSES METHODISTS STUDENTS

Baton Rouge, La., Nov. 10 (By R. L. Shade for ANP) When President F. G. Clark of Southern university addressed the forum of Methodist Episcopal students at the Louisiana state university last Monday, it marked the first appearance of a Negro speaker at the school on a topic not dealing with the race angle.

The subject chosen by Dr. Clark was: "The Role of Education in Modern Life." In his speech he pointed out that different schools emphasize different aspects of cultural pattern. "Trends of modern life," he said, "reveal need for experience relating to self-realization, human relationship, economic efficiency and civic responsibility. The responsibility of education is to develop these within each individual. The group cannot have these qualities unless they are individually possessed by every member of the group."

FORTY-EIGHT RED CAPS FIRED BECAUSE OF POS- SIBLE TIPS' RULING

St. Louis, Nov. 10 (ANP)—Forty-eight of the Union Station's 105 red caps were dismissed last week because their employer, the Terminal Railroad association, feared an adverse ruling under the wage-hour act on whether tips may be considered as part of wages, and this would require back payment of salaries.

Just before the new federal law went into effect October 24, the Terminal discharged 43 red caps in the expectation that the act would fix the men's wages at 25 cents an hour. They were re-hired, however, after an agreement whereby their tips previously their only compensation were to be supplemented if they fell below the $11 a week minimum wage.

The local technical center of the NYA, is also active in civic affairs. He is commander of the Horace G. Burke post, No. 3480, of the VFW and is being considered for state deputy chief of staff. He is married and the father of five children.

HELP THE CHEST

WHITE STORES FEATURE

HARLEM'S DOCTOR
BOOK ON WOMEN

New York, (C) Nov. 12—Three big white book stores, Brentano's Putman's and Wanamakers' have taken a consignment of the new book, "The Glory of Womanhood," by Dr. Joseph Wellington, 1921, Seventh Ave. The booklet, the text of which was first delivered as an address before the Empire State Federation of Women's Clubs was sponsored by the Booklovers Club of New York, Mrs. Nannie C. Burden, president.

Shortly after the original address before the clubwomen Dr. Wellington was given a banquet in Harlem at which he was toasted for the lofty tribute to woman contained in the address. He was so inspired by this public appreciation that he had the work published in book form.

Dr. Wellington first studied for the ministry at Gammon Theological Seminary, Atlanta, Ga., but changed to medicine at the University of Vermont, taking the M. D. degree there in '20. He has been practicing in Harlem for 17 years.

That he did not agree with any one who said the high school "was too good for Negroes, wops and Poles." The strike was called last Monday morning, and students refused to attend their class until a committee from their ranks had been selected to investigate the source of the alleged statement. The committee met with Gleen G. Halladay, principal, and Leonard Deming, superintendent of the school.
