A WEEK AFTER BEEF DEAL, ARGENTINE SPENDS $2,300,000 WITH THE UNITED STATES

The plea for a more consistent government farm program was made today by Professor Roderic Crane of the University of Omaha who, at the same time, characterized the purchase of Argentine beef by the navy as just another example of agriculture being the victim of a policy of "rob Peter to pay Paul."

The business professor suggested that the federal government make up its mind about the fate of the farm industry, make a definite decision on the question that is perplexing the farmer, "to be or not to be," and save wear and tear on the American taxpayer.

"If agriculture is worth millions of dollars in bounties and subsidies then why cut off its domestic market?" Professor Crane asked; "and if it isn't worth while why keep it going and waste the taxpayer's money?"

The sequel to the Argentine beef deal shows that manufacturing is benefiting at the expense of agriculture, the University of Omaha professor declared.

"A week after the beef deal, Argentine announced that her import quota on automobiles would be revised to admit General Motors' cars to the tune of $2,300,000.

"Now let's see how 'the tempest in the tin can' shapes up. 48,000 pounds of corned beef at 9 cents a pound means $43,000 to the Argentine farmer, while our manufacturer gets a new market worth $2,300,000—obviously a good trade and more than just a small breeze to General Motors.

bles there. But the farmer wants markets and not subsidies.
"The encouragement of international trade is obviously one of the solutions to the world's problems but the necessary trade should not all be at the expense of agriculture which after all is our country's largest industry.
"We are starving the patient and at the same time giving him a shot in the arm."
