"Doings at Fort Riley"

Headquarters Citizens' Military Training Camp, Office of the Commanding General Fort Riley, Kansas.

This camp, established in 1931, is the oldest CMT. Camp for colored trainees in the United States. The camp was opened Thursday July 6th, 1939, with over one hundred and seventy applicants reporting from Arkansas, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Iowa and Illinois.

The camp is held for one month each summer under the auspices of the War Department. The various courses of instruction have among their objectives the physical, moral, and mental development of the American youth; the stimulation of interest in Military Training as a benefit to the individual and as a vital asset to National Defense; and the teaching of Americanism in its true sense including the privileges, duties, and responsibilities of an American Citizen.

The trainees' day is a busy one. He sleeps in a tent—Army fashion, and must roll out at the break of dawn for 15 minutes of military callisthenics. This is followed by a tent inspection and breakfast at the well known 9th Cavalry Mess. The remainder of the morning will be devoted to drill, target practice, and classes in Hygiene, first aid, and citizenship. The afternoons will be given mainly to supervised athletics, including boxing, baseball, volley ball, tennis, track and swimming in the beautiful 9th Cavalry pool. Various forms of recreation have been provided for the evenings and holidays.

The camp will be conducted in a series of four courses with trainees assigned to courses according to mental qualifications and previous military experience. Graduation from one course with recommendation for further training qualifies the trainee to return the following year to the next higher course. In addition to mental requirements the applicant must show evidence of good moral character and must pass a physical fitness examination.

The meaning of discipline is an important part of the instruction and special effort is made to teach the trainee the methods and the importance of developing discipline in the training and control of soldiers. The salute, bearing, demeanor and address of all personnel connected with the camp is required to meet a high standard of correctness at all times. The trainee must present a neat soldierly appearance and keep his equipment in excellent condition. Order, neatness and sanitation in quarters and in camp is insisted upon.

The status of those trainees in the two highest courses is analogous to that of cadet officers and non-commissioned officers at the United States Military Academy.

The formal opening exercises were held on July 7th at 10:30 a. m. Brigadier General Robert C. Richardson, Jr., U. S. A., Commandant of the Cavalry School, Fort Riley, Kansas, and Commander of the camp addressed the trainees at that time.

NAACP President Dies at 64

es of Colonel Spingarn was that delivered at the annual conference of the NAACP in Cleveland, Ohio in 1919 in which he flayed the treatment of the Negro by white America and called for a militant assault on all fronts to secure full citizenship rights for colored Americans.

His final speech before a large NAACP gathering was in Detroit, Mich., in 1937 when he spoke on the "Youth Night" of the association. In that speech, he reviewed the record of militant action which had taken by the NAACP in years past, told of the difficulties and prejudices in the early days of the movement, and exhorted the youth councils of the NAACP to take up the battle and fight a good fight.

Mr. Spingarn was a life member of the association, having paid in many years ago the $500 membership fee. He did not, however regard this as a truly life membership which relieved him of all other contributions and throughout his life, he was a steady and substantial contributor to the association's budget. Mrs. Amy Spingarn, his widow is also a life member of the NAACP.

From his earliest days, Colonel Spingarn was a liberal on all public questions. Aside from his deep interest in the Negro, he was talented in many fields of endeavor. He was a distinguished critic and poet; the author of four volumes of criticism and one volume of poems. He was a graduate of Columbia and Harvard universities, receiving his Ph.D. from the latter. He was head of the Department of Comparative Literature at Columbia university, resigning his post in 1911 by request after he had led a spirited revolt involving the issue of academic freedom in behalf of a fellow professor.

He was a contributor to encyclopedias and dictionaries and was an authority in horticulture, especially on the flower clematis. He was recognized as one of the leading, if not the leading authority on clematis in the world and possessed on his estate at Amenia the largest collection of clematis in the world, 250 species. The Garden Clubs of America gave him a gold medal, the National Horticultural society awarded him the Jackson Dawson Medal. He was a member of the board of managers of the New Botanical Garden.

He lectured before many garden clubs in America and his standard fee for such services was a contribution to the NAACP by the garden club which engaged him to lecture.

Tribute to Mrs. Spingarn's militant and uncompromising leadership was paid by Walter White, secretary, as soon as news of his death was made public: "Mr. Spingarn was a leader ideally suited to the presidency of the N.A.A.C.P.," said Mr. White, "because deep in his heart he believed passionately in equal rights for all citizens irrespective of race, color or creed and never in all the twenty-one years it was my privilege to work with him did he deviate from that high principle."

Funeral services were private and were held in Dutchess county on July 27. Mr. Spingarn is survived by his widow; two sons, Stephen J. and Edward D. W.; two daughters, the Misses Hope and Honor; his mother and three brothers, one of whom, Arthur B., is chairman of the NAACP national legal committee and a member of the board of directors.
