By Albert J. Bates An empty expanse of prairieland pecomes a vast airplane engine manufacturing plant . . . where a few months ago a factory engaged in the peaceful pursuit of hairpin making, it is today turning out parts for deadly guns . . . a belting company of yesterday is the producer if tank parts today.

Industry is writing its most briltiant chapter of achievement and conversion since the dawn of indusrial America. Marvels of conversion, production and speed are gomg on under our eyes . . . marvels too great to appreciate while they are in the making. It will take the perspective of years to gain a true appreciation of the accomplish-

Not many months ago the automobile industry was geared to turn out more than 4,000,000 motor venicles annually. In the greatest conversion job of all time . . . achieved in an unbelievably short period . . . it is now producing millions of articles of war ranging from small parts to complete tanks, airplane engines, howitzers, and other war

Other plants, and in some cases entire industries, have changed almost overnight from peacetime pursuits to arsenals of war. New plants, non-existent a few months ago, have sprung up to add their capacity to our rapidly expanding production. And everywhere new production records are being established, in many cases double and treble the original figures. Keep Pitching, America!
