E. R. E.—I am in hopes that you help me on my problem as it is mighty important to me. I met a man about two months ago and he asked me to marry him. He's a gambler and I am a little afraid I will be made unhappy. Please tell me if he will change and what should I do?

Ans: Men who have gambling in their blood seldom if ever, change. Therefore you should not marry him thinking that he can be changed over night. He has money in his pockets today... he's broke tomorrow. A happy home cannot be built on such insecurity. And at your age you want security of a home more than anything else. It is fortunate that you are not so madly in love with him that you are blind to his faults.

C. B.—I have a good paying job but the work is hard and keeps me tied down. For years I have had a secret ambition to write songs. I wonder if I were to give up my job and put my whole time on writing could I make a good living?

Ans: Hard work and regular meals are far better than starving to death trying to write songs. You have several hours of leisure each day and you can try your hand at writing songs if you like. People are at their best when they have a hobby or enjoy some form of diversion from their every day duties. You haven't reached the professional stage in song writing. Until you do, you shouldn't give up your job.

M. L. W.—I have been married 8 years and have 5 children. We lived in 2 rooms in the house with his mother all this time. He started running around and on top of all this, he only half fed the children, so I came back home to my mother. She says she will keep the children while I work. Did I do wrong?

Ans: The change you will make may prove to be what it will take to open his eyes. Go to work and do the best that you can for your children. Also insist that he contribute to their support. If and when he gets out and finds you a place of your own and agrees to assume responsibility of you and the children... go to him.

E. L. M.—I'm 17 and in love with a boy 20. Things were going on swell until my mother saw him kiss me and I responded. After he left, mother said a lot of mean
