200 NEGRO SEABEES VOLUNTEER FOR FURTHER DUTY
who came to life behind the front lines. Once, they were even charged by three enemy tanks. When a shell burst on the beach, injuring 15 men, the Negro Seabees reached the scene first. They pulled out the wounded.

When a mortar shell set fire to a large ammunition dump, 50 Seabees started moving the shells. They had to be called off when the exploding ammunition pinned down everyone on the entire beach. When ordered to carry ammunition up to the front lines, volunteers took so many cases forward to a Marine infantry officer told them, Knock it off. We just want enough ammunition for the night. We don't need the entire dump. When a stretcher detail was needed to go down into a draw in front of a heavily fortified ridge to bring out wounded at midnight, 16 Seabees volunteered. The Negroes are enormously proud of the record of their unit has made.

Seaman, First Class, Edward Scott, 20, of 313 Dickinson Street, Fremont, Ohio was on the lines four times as a stretcher bearer. The second night he was in a foxhole with a Marine officer when four Japanese started moving in. When the Marine fired, one Jap fell and played dead for a time. Then he attempted flank the position while the other three came on. Seaman Scott got two of them, the Marine officer accounted for the others.

Seaman, First Class, Lemon Jackson, 26, of 712 East Alabama Street, Florence, Ala., was pinned down in his foxhole near the front lines. He had ammunition to get forward and he was asked. He deliberately showed himself to draw Jap fire (this is the story of others—not Jackson). Then "I just shot up in a tree and there he was," said the Seabee. Seaman, First Class, Henry Hall, of 2215 A Cass Avenue, St. Louis, Mo., thanks an unidentified Marine for saving his life. A Jap was moving in on Hall, and the Seabee's rifle jammed. A passing Marine knocked off the Jap, but shrugged away the Negro's thanks with "That's okay, you guys have been saving us with the ammo you've been carrying."

"Me, I just went on about my business of looking for a deeper foxhole," grinned Hall, who made nine trips to the lines in eight days. Seaman, First Class, James Key Nichols, 20, of 5047 South Parkway Chicago, has a souvenir of one trip across the exposed airport. He was carrying one end of a stretcher when a Japanese machine gun killed the Seabee on the front end. Nichols' canteen was pierced by two bullets. "Left me without water," he mourned at the dressing station where he delivered the wounded Marine by himself two hours later.

Seaman, First Class, George F. Jenkins, of 350 East 53d Street, Chicago was carrying ammunition across the airport when he saw a Marine fall, hit by a sniper. Seaman Jenkins brought in the wounded man. Moving an inert victim several hundred yards by yourself is a difficult task. Seaman, First Class, Leo McDowell, of 588 East 53d Street, Chicago, (a neighbor of Jenkins), was another Seabee who had his companion shot while carrying a stretcher. McDowell simply placed his buddy on the stretcher with the wounded Marine and dragged it to the first aid station—an ordeal lasting more than an hour.

Machinist Mate, Third Class, Emory L. Jennings, of 386 Post Office Street, Altus, Okla., heard there was a wounded man on the edge of the airport. Despite continuous sniper fire, he went and got him. Seaman, Second Class, Leroy Moses heard a Jap in a foghorn yelling for help. Moses and two Navy corpsmen went out. One pharmacist's mate was shot by the screaming Jap who was in turn killed by Moses who then went down and helped in a wounded man. Seaman, First Class, Jimmy Shearard, of 200 Ray Street, Anderson, S.C., also heard Japs yelling. "Sounded as if they were calling

LEYTE LIBERATORS LOVELIEST (PPNS) Since 1942 has sent hundreds of photos of lovely lassies to servicemen, both in camps and on the fighting fronts to choose "Chinup Queens." The photo of Miss Ola Mae Hamilton, of cKstone W. Va., was chosen by a unit headed by Pvt. Fc. Robert Lee Parker, one of the fighting Leyte soldiers, she is shown after making a dip in her private pool. Miss Hamilton is one of the nation's beauties and vied for the title and crown on "Miss Bronze America" at the American Negro Exposition in Chicago 1940.

must," he said. "Then one Jap called down: 'We see you throwing flares—we're coming' but they did not." "I guess the boys have a right to be proud," said Lieutenant Commander Berry. "They got into the habit of volunteering so much when we had to bury some long-dead Japs, two dozen Seabees stepped out before I had time to tell them what they were volunteering for."
