Your Home
By Frances Ainsworth

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—Most women, when choosing furniture for their home, like to pick out individual pieces to meet their personal requirements, to carry out their individual ideas. It is for this very basic reason that the "open stock" idea is growing in such popularity. This is true for both bedroom and dining room. And it is true when working out a room in modern style or using traditional, period designs.

Up to a few years ago, only the wealthy could afford to select furniture the "open stock" way. Then several of the alert makers from Grand Rapids broke away from the stereotyped "suite" idea, and put their designers to work working out correlated ensembles of very smartly styled "open stock" groups. They were enthusiastically received over night. The development of this idea has been the key to better taste and greater economy.

No one is forced to buy a whole suite. You can start with a few "good" pieces, with the assurance of being able to add more later, as you desire. And you can choose just the size, function, and type of piece you want for your purpose. Open stock—the idea started in Grand Rapids—is the only way to buy your furniture.
