ABBE'S NEW 1945 READINGS ARE NOW READY! I, D.—I am a widow and have a monthly income of 50 dollars. Advise me what to do about my living arrangements. I have two sons, but I don't want to go and make my home with them. I do want to be successful and happy and I want to know what is best for me to do.

J. W. C.—I was living with a girl up until the time I went into service. She wanted to come home with me. She wouldn't treat me nice when I came out of the Army and she wouldn't help me with anything, not matter what kind of task I had before her. And she wouldn't spend any of her money to have enough for two people to live in. But she would of same house that I do, and she claims that she loves me. But she won't speak of love when I have money. Should I marry this girl or wait for the other one to come home?

M. A.—I have been going with a man 2 years and he wants to marry me. He's 28 and I'm 22. He's a gambler and never has any money or must I do? Ans. If he doesn't love you enough now to make a man of himself and doesn't want to come home until he has money, then he will never make a change after marriage. You can bet your bottom dollar that his own accord, if they have any intentions of reforming at all. You love would turn to disgust. Better marry someone you can respect and depend on.

T. L. S.—I have been married only two months and my husband is getting where he stays out all night at times, telling me that he drinks and doesn't want to come home until he is sober. He claims that he loves me and wants to treat me right. Now is there any hope for this man, or what must I do? Ans. You are a middle-aged, and mature enough to approach your marriage from a reasonable and adult standpoint. If you are ever to have any influence over your husband, it will have to be now. Talk with him calmly and without criticizing and bring the situation to a head. Try to make him see that he is being unfair to you and to your old to start living at such a fast pace, and should be thinking of the comforts of a home. If he must go out, it is his duty to dress and go with him, and in that way you can encourage him to be more conservative in his forms of entertainment. You have to work at any marriage to make it successful.
