Keep Bread Moist

Brown sugar or marshmallows placed in the bread box will help to keep the bread moist.

Milk is baby's natural food, but It isn't entirely adequate for more than a few weeks. After cod liver pil and orange juice are introduced, then come the solid foods, baby cereals, strained vegetables

Usually a special baby cereal is the first of the supplementary foods. These cereals are available in pre-cooked form, with added vitamins and minerals which are needed in addition to those present in milk. A cereal is usually started at about 3 months of age, earlier if your doctor decides it is

This first solid food is fed with. a spoon so your baby will learn to eat and so he will learn to handle solid food with his tongue. At first, dilute the cereal with enough milk or formula so it is a creamy consistency. This is something entirely new to him, so give only a taste the first day or two. Later it may be made thicker.

After he has learned to eat cereal, perhaps in a couple of weeks, one of the strained vegetables is introduced. It may be Carrots of Spinach. For a few days, dilute the vegetable with some milk After he has learned to eat one vegetable, then give him another feeding the same one for several days until it is familiar. During the next two or three months, gradually give a variety of vegetables and fruits, all finely strained as they come in the small cans

Be casual, matter-of-fact and enjoy feeding your baby, so that CLEAVES TEMPLE he will associate happiness with his mealtimes.

Loose Custres. Too much sugar added to custards prevents them from thickening prop-progress. During his pastorate forty members have been added, and the church is taking its place in the community as a power in the salvation of the city.

Robert Harris, Secretary. T. J. Douglass, Minister.

A young baby needs a drink of water frequently. You may think that since his diet is mainly milk, that since his diet is mainly milk, he will have enough liquid. Or, you just may not think about giving him water.

Boil fresh water, when preparing his breakfast, place in a covered sterilized bottle (or a fruit jar)

and serve it at room temperature.

If it is kept for more than half a day, it should be put in the refrigerator, but bring it to room temperature before giving to the

Give water between meals. If he gets restless some time before the next meal, give him a drink of water. If it is almost meal time, give him only a small amount.

Drinking of water offers you an opportunity to introduce your baby to a cup before he is ready to take orange juice or milk from a cup. At first you can give it in a bot-

At first you can give it in a bot-tle and the smaller size bottles are convenient. Then, when you think it possible and reasonable, give him some water in a spoon. When drinking water from a spoon gets to be routine, then graduate to a Later when cereal is started, probably your doctor will advise a baby cereal during the third month, make it quite liquid and feed it from the now familiar spoon.

Even after your baby begins to have a varied diet of cereals, vegetables, fruits and custard, remember to give him a drink of water between each two meals. It is one of the good food habits you wil'
