L. M. B.—I have been reading your advice to others and enjoy your articles very much. I have been writing a soldier for more than a year, he's 28 and I'm 20. We haven't seen each other, only exchanged photos. He claims he loves me, sends me elegant gifts and when I fail to answer his letters promptly, he writes my mother asking if I am ill. Now he wants me to marry him when he returns to the States, which will be shortly. I've learned to enjoy his letters, appreciate his gifts and stare at his picture for hours. Can you tell me what to do?

P. S.—I am 23 years of age. I've married twice, already and unsuccessfully, now a widow, with three small children. I have to work hard naturally to support them. I am human and have a certain longing for male companionship so I started going with what I thought a nice fellow who has a good job but to my dismay he is married. He is nice in every way, considerate and kind to the children. His society wife, seemingly only interested in clothes and going places. He is rarely with her. I find he loves me and I care for him too. I wouldn't think of a separation on his side so now he frank and tell me what to do?

Ans: No plans can be formulated until you meet personally and determine if there is a mutual bond of liking between you. He realizes as well as you do, that no serious plans should be made until you two have had the opportunity to go together and become acquainted with each other. You might write him to the effect that you look forward to meeting him when he returns but leave a loop hole—if you are disappointed when you see him or if you do not come up to his expectations, neither of you should hesitate to voice your opinion.

Ans: Encouraging a married man is certainly not the thing to do. It will only bring on more grief and complications. As long as this man lives with his wife, regardless of his feeling for her, you should not encourage him or accept his attentions. You are comparatively young and should seek a husband and a father for your children but a married man is no likely prospect. When you associate with a married man, you are decreasing your chances for getting a mate. Your friend knows this to be a fact and if he is as fond of you as you think him to be, he will not jeopardize your future by continuing this relationship when he knows it will lead nowhere.

Ans: You alone must decide the type of work you want to do as a life's decision is being made. Your uncle is trying to help you face the facts and not go into a line of work blindly. Both professions will require hard work but enforcement of Section 2, Article XIV of the Constitution. The letter declared that, as an example, the representation of Mississippi in the House would be reduced from 7 to a maximum of 4 if the amendment were enforced. "If we omit any reference to woman voters" the letter said, "we find that according to the census of 1940 there were 592,357 males in that state 21 years of age and over. Of this number 274,977 were Negroes.

"If the Congress would proceed to enforce the above cited section, the representation of Mississippi in the House would be reduced by approximately 47 percent. In varying degrees, the same holds true for other states where Negroes are systematically and deliberately denied the right to vote."

Pointing out that the request for enforcing the 14th Amendment is not new the letter declared:

"However, it seems particularly pertinent now, since the Congress has begun action looking to the reduction of representation because of the presence of non-voting aliens in the population of a number of states. It is pertinent, also, because of the calous manner in which legislation in which Negro citizens have a deep interest has been handled in the Congress even to the point that these citizens have had to endure brazen
