THE NEW 1946 READINGS ARE NOW READY

Pvt C. R. — I am 18 years old and I am in love with a girl of 15. She does not believe I love her because I fool around with a lady 26. The reason for this is that this woman gives me anything I want,

I would like to marry my young friend but she doesn't believe that I love her and I can't seem to convince her. Give me some advice. Ans: Your young sweetheart is too smart to have the wool pulled over her eyes—she knows that if you were at all serious with her, you would not even loy at this other woman regardless of how attractive her offers might be. If you love the young girl, you had best get wise to yourself and discontinue your relations with the woman, as she is not going to tolerate your tom-foolery much longer.

R. L. M.—I am a young lady of 18, married for a year and a half. Husband was in service but now he is out. Everytime I go out with out him he gets angry with me and we argue part of the night. He does not even want me to look at younger men and I want to know if I should stay or leave. I know I love him.

Ans: How would you react if your husband should go out alone at night and gaze at the beautiful young girls? The chances are it would rile you considerably. You are young now and whether you realize it or not, your actions now will govern to a great extent the happiness you will get from your future marriage. Therefore, it is most important that you do nothing to make your husband unhappy and fretted with you. Form the habit of going out together and sharing jobs and pleasures. You have no grounds whatever for wanting to leave your husband. Stay together and exert all your effort to understand and get along well with each other.

W. B.—I signed up last summer as a Cadet Nurse. I passed all my exams and apparently doing all right but I made up my mind that I am not going to finish. I am sure that I would be happier if I were to return home with the family. Yet, I know my folks will be very disappointed in me. Tell me what to do?

Ans: Put all personal preference aside and look at your case in the cold light of reason. Yes, it would be nice to be home with the family again but have you thought of the disappointment and humiliation they will experience to have you admit defeat. You may be depressed right now but if you will stick it out within a few weeks time it will wear off and you will be proud that you didn't succumb to a period of weakness. You must always bear in mind that there is one thing you cannot escape and that is the future—and you can't meet the future with confidence unless you are prepared. Your parents will be proud of you if you stick it out—you will be proud of yourself when you finish.

G. M. C.—My half brother died in the east and they telegraphed me. I left immediately so that I could attend the funeral. I have 9 half sisters and brothers. I am the oldest. When I arrived no one met me at the station. I went out to the house and no one seemed very happy to see me. I went to the funeral and was terribly hurt because I wasn't permitted to sit with the family. Now this hurt me very badly. After everything was over they didn't seem sociable to me at all and I left and took the long train journey homeward. I didn't tell my husband how I was treated as I have a good husband and we get along fine and always have. But I just want you to tell me if I should worry any longer about the way my half sisters and brothers acted at this funeral.

Ans: On some occasions of a great sorrow, such as you mentioned above, families do not always think rationally. It was certainly not their intention to hurt your feelings at such a crucial moment. Provision was not made for you at the funeral because you were not expected. People receive slight all of the time but if they take offense to them, they live a life of misery. You must force yourself to be big enough to overlook the peculiarities and shortcomings of others and never be offended and irritated when things don't work in your favor. You do have a wonderful home and husband and you must not continue to grieve over this experience as it would disrupt your home life and make your husband unhappy. Forget it!
