THE NEW 1946 READINGS ARE NOW READY

L. L. C.—I am coming to you a problem that is of great concern to me. I am at the present and have been for some time back in love with another man's wife. I can't even notice another woman nor am I at myself at all unless I am in her company. She has me completely under her spell. After reading your columns I thought that you could probably tell me something to do as I am perfectly miserable and she says she may be able to get her freedom o we can be as one.

Ans regardless of how much you apparently love the woman, the fact still remains that she's married and belongs to another man. There is no happy ending for a romance under these conditions—someone is going to be hurt and disillusioned and since you are the logical one to withdraw, o so now before it is too late. As long as you pamper your self by seeing this woman, no girl will be attractive to you. You would never forgive yourself if you talked the woman into getting a divorce. What she does of her own accord is of no consequence to you but you won't have something on your conscience which would be hard to remove. Make friends with the single girls and be determined that you will not wreck someone else's home.

C. H. A.—I have been going with a man for a long time and he said he loved me more than anyone else. He called me his number 1. Well he saw me with a friend, nothing more than a good friend, and it upset him so much that he is acting queer now. My boyfriend is funny I suppose. I am wondering if he will ever love me as much as he did?

Ans: It's perfectly natural for a lover to get 'green eyed' when he sees his number one girl with another man. But if he can't be reasonable and accept the facts, then you must decide right now if you would like to be married to a man of this disposition. You did not intentionally try to arouse his jeolously—was merely passing a litle time with the friend. Explain your side of the story and if he fails to see it as it actually was, you had best not get too in love with him.

I. V. D.—I met a boy in service and we liked eoch other right from the start. He is getting discharged and says he will be back within a week for me. I know that he must care as he will do anything for me at any time. Some of my friends are telling me now that maybe I should not marry him as I have only known him since last fall. Tell me what to do?

Ans: If you begin listening to all the idle chatter you hear, you are in for a sad life. You and your boyfriend are most compatible, you enjoy each others company, are interested in the same things in life and find each other ever amusing. What else do you want? Shut your ears to outsiders and let your heart lead you in this case.

M. H. S.—I am in love with a boy I met in September. He had planned to leave before he met me but after we met, he stayed another week or so and then left. Before he left, I heard some bad reports about him and when he asked had I heard anything about him, I told him yes. He told me that he had planned to tell me himself but wanted to wait until later. He begged me to write him when he left. I told him I would if he would write me first but he didn't want to do this. So he has been gone quite some time now and he hasn't written and I want to know if I should write him first? His brother is telling me now that he is married.

Ans:That alone should be reason enough for you not to write the fellow at all—either answer his letters were he to write to you. You found him attractive and charming but it is definitely not true love. There is one factor that you are overlooking—if this young man were single and very interested in you, he would not need any coaxing at all to write you first, second or otherwise Don't worry your pretty head any longer about this fellow—get out and make new friends and be sure they are single.

WALLER DEATH SAYING PRISONERS ANTHOLOGY

New York City (WDL—)The dying statement of Odell Waller Negro sharcropper executed in 1942 for the fatal shooting in self defense of his white landlord, is contained in the great prisoners first anthology of literature written ten in prison. The book edited by Asidore Abramowitz and published by E. P. Dutton and Co., also contains a piece by Eugene Debs.

A two year court fight to save Waller's life was conducted by the Workers Defense League.

He was originally convicted in 1940 by a Pittsylvania County, Va., all white jury. The US Supreme court twice declined to hear the case on the basis of the poll tax issue.
