A. N. C.—I am 21, have been married four years and my husband is 29. He was away from home in service until about a year ago. We are living in the house with my parents and it seems like we have worn out our welcome. We have been planning to build our home but we can't get materials. What should we do stay on here or try to build our way so we can be happy? My husband is the sweetest man in the world.

Ans: There is no one house large enough for two families to live together in and be happy, especially if they are related. You and your husband will always be welcome in your parent's home but the time has come for you to find a little nest of your own. Building is probably out of the question for you right now. With a little effort you can find a place to live, you'll find most renters give preference to ex-servicemen. You and hubby will be happier in a back room to yourselves than

THE NEGRO IN NATIONAL MAGAZINES

TRUE "How Jim Crow Feels" is told by Richard Wright, eminent writer, in the November issue of True magazine. Returning to his birthplace in Natchez, Miss., after a 25 year absence. His is the experience of an American Negro traveling from the Mexican border to the Atlantic seaboard, by train. The time is 1940. His humiliations began when he reached the Texas border. "The beginning of the Land of the Free and the Home of the Brave" His longest stopover was in Natchez, the place of his birth. "What I saw there made me wonder why I had wanted to see and feel it all again," he says. "I discovered the only thing that had really changed was I."

THIS MONTH A Word portrait and character study of Boston born, Harvard educated, bigotry fighting John R. Tunis, sports writers and novelist, is presented in the current issue of This Month magazine. Under the heading of "Kids Are Important People," Dave Stanley says, "instead of denouncing prejudice, Tunis' voice is his passionate Americanism through the medium of an exciting yarn". Tunis is rated one of America's best juvenile writers. His novel, "All Americans", a book on race prejudice that taps the roots of our Negro - white, North-South problems, is spotlighted.

SALUTE Stetson Kennedy gets behind the scenes in Georgia in his article, "Inside Georgia's Klan" in the November issue of Salute Magazine. He tells why most of the Georgians are opposed to the KKK but are helpless to do anything about it. Examining the records of some of the men who held high political offices in the past, he reveals why the Klan logically expects great gains in membership and increased influence under Talmadge.

CORONET "Ham and Eggs Georgia Style", has lead Negroes in Georgia up the road to economic security, writes Jane Floyd Buck in the Coronet Magazine for November. It all came through the vision of one man, Otis Samuel O'Neil, Negro agent of the Georgia Agricultural Extension Service. Over thirty years ago, O'Neil, a graduate of Fort Valley State College and Tuskegee Institute, began leading earnestly ambitious Negro farmers out of the uncertain existence of hit or miss hog raising and farming. In 1916 and in each succeeding year there has been a "Ham and Eggs" show of farm products in the Ft. Valley College auditorium. This year "bulging succulent hams" and "glistening white", on a display, were of a quality to interest merchants dealing in first class ham and egg products.

LOOK Along with Dinah Shore Bobby Sherwood, William Primrose and others, Sam Rowland, who writes Look Magazine's Record Guide for November 12th, included and recommends Henry "Red" Allen, Negro trumpet player's latest recordings. Commenting, Roland says if Allen, "Hot Jazz" Victor has Henry Allen playing a hot and fast "Count Me Out" and a contrastingly slow "If It's Love You Want". Both sides feature Red Allen's trumpet and J. C. Gigginotham on the trombone.

EBONY Safe-cracking and busting locks, professionally, but legally, is the rare trade of slim, wiry, deft-fingered, 62 year-old Tony Donovan, Negro lock expert of Harlem, says Ebony Magazine in the November issue. Donovan is one of only two licensed Negro Key makers in New York City. He learned to crack safes 35 years ago. Donovan has never done a stretch in the Big House. Ebony says, "Recently a police captain broke key in a police car." Another time, suspicious cops witnessing his uncanny feats with locks, wanted to know if he "was
