D. K.—I received your kind advice and it was wonderful to my troubled soul. You have helped me so much in mind and spirit, and I am hoping that I will continue to grow stronger and I only wish I had found your service 20 years ago. You don't know how much you have done for me and I just had to let you know.

V. E. C.—I am a weekly reader. Tell me, must I forget this?

Dear you must. You cannot compete with his c. l. wife. It is best to try, with your face and figure it is ridiculous for you to waste your love on the likes of this gentleman. Gave him his mailing papers.

Y. D. D.—I am confused and disappointed in girls in general. I have always been the type to play fair and even and even take a compromising attitude when they are caught being unfair, however, it seems I will never be regarded by even one girl really getting serious with me. They take me as their pal. Should I continue looking for a mate or content myself to be an old bacn. elor.

Ans: Wise up Jackson. You will not find your "fair princess" among the sporting girls in houses of prostitution. Lay off moralizing. Interest yourself for a change in the good people of your city. In churches, civic and fraternal affairs. Remember this my friend... you read what you sow.

S. G.—I am 15 years old and I have been going with a boy 20 for almost a year. Work at the same place. I have had some (personal dates) with him. Am I too young? My cousin is almost 17 and she hasn't ever had one, or rather this is what she says and I believe it. Am I doing wrong?

Ans: Decidedly so. You cousin has the right slant, follow her example. The boy friend is (personal) of every girl he can make. This is dangerous business. You can easily ruin your health and besides the risk I great for you may find yourself an unwed mother. Have your fun and enjoy yourself but learn to say NO.

American Teachers Assn. Contributes to NAACP Fight

NEW YORK, Dec. 23rd—For their eighth consecutive year, the American Teachers Association, formerly the National Association of Teachers in Colored Schools, has contributed to the NAACP Education and Legal Defense Fund one-tenth of their income from annual memberships. This year their contribution amounted to $1,064.90. Over the past eight years, the American Teachers Association has made contributions totaling $3,392.80.

In a letter to Walter White of the NAACP, H. Council Trenholm, Executive Secretary of the American Teachers Association, said: "This contribution represents our approach to the work of the NAACP in the area of teacher welfare and teacher salaries. We are appreciative of the work being done by the NAACP and we are pleased to support the work in this way. Our contributions are an expenditure and investment in which the American Teachers Association takes pride."

OMAHA—About three million bottles of water purification tablets, declared surplus by the armed forces, are being offered for sale by WAA at prices ranging from five cents to six cents per bottle of 100 and from nine cents to 10.8 cents per bottle of 200.

The tablets, which cost the government about $250,000 are expected to find a market among

ALONG MY WAY

(BY LAWRENCE P. LEWIS)

The Jack-Pot

For ten years I have been trying to get even with these Slot Machines. I have not lost my weekly pay or the baby's shoes, but the few dollars that I have lost have always made me more eager to get them again so that I could get my money back.

Just when I was beginning to win a few nickles back they have taken them out of the many establishments. It just doesn't seem fair to me, but the law is the law and it must be obeyed or else. I don't play them often, like I do the races during their running at the Ak-Sar-Ben track, but every once in a while when I am out seeking the gayer part of life, I chance a nickle or so. Sometimes I win, but let's keep that a secret.

A very good friend of mine seems to win most of the time and truthfully he does. I tell him he is just lucky, but he has explained to me more than once how it should be done in order to win.

One evening I met my good friend on 24th and Lake. After I had met him I anticipated a good bridge or whist game. He had other ideas.

"How about a little taste of something while we talk," my friend asked.

I was more than glad to accept. I was glad that he had not mentioned the card game. I wanted to sit and talk, making the world over, and telling tall stories about how I won the war.

After the first drink my friend wanted to venture further. In order to continue the conversation, I had to venture along with him. I had not even begun to tell him about the swell time I enjoyed in Calcutta.

Arriving at the club, the first thing that came into view was the gaily colored and inviting slot machines. My friend looked at one of them and remarked, "this one is about ready to pay off. I think I will try a few nickles."

He reached into his pockets, separated his change, and inserted one of his coins. My hand did not go into my pocket so readily. I dealers supplying campers, fishermen, travelers, and municipalities. Exporters also are expected to buy for foreign countries, particularly, Mexico, Central and So. America, where drinking water in many areas must be boiled.

Two tablets will purify a quart of drinking water.

Beggar's Holiday

Helps Sydenham

New York (CNS)—The drive to say Sydenham, the only interracial voluntary hospital in the country, went over to the top on Christmas Day and received a double boost from the cast of "Beggar's Holiday" last week.

Prior to the pre-opening benefit performance given for the hospital, the cast presented a check of $650, representing its personal contribution. Rollin Smith, cast member, and Perry Watkins, Negro producer of the opus, made the presentation.

had put coins in them before when I thought they were about ready to pay off.

"Watch this," he said.

Round and round the wheels went and when they stopped nickles sounded like they were falling everywhere. Of course he had only hit ten, but when you are playing the slot machines, ten sounds like a fortune.

"This is only the beginning," my friend said. "I'm going for the jackpot."

"You had better cut now!" I remarked, angry at myself because I had not the courage to put the nickle instead of him.

"Want to go in with me?" my friend asked.

"No, no, I am going to play this other one," I replied. "I'll show you how to win on these machines."

I began searching my pocket for some coins. He had continued playing and everytime the machine stopped and no nickles fell, I smiled to myself; would have put myself on the back if I could because of my good judgement by not going in with him.

After hitting three pats out of ten I felt like quitting. I had won five nickles and they have always told me you can't win forever.

My friend walked to the bar, received a drink and received some more nickles. After giving me my drink he continued playing the machine. "No use being a piker," I thought to myself, I might as well chance my winnings and go for bigger stakes. I'd show my friend that I could win as well as anyone else.

As I pulled the handle, with my eyes wide open and my heart beating faster than ever, I watched the cherries, lemons, oranges, plums, bells, and bars as they fell into place. When the first two wheels had stopped and they had matched I about had heart failure when the third wheel stopped on the wrong selection.

I was more determined to match all of them, and even had hopes of hitting the jackpot. I was coming close, but close doesn't count. Staying even wasn't my objective now. I was going to play big shot.

I was either going to lose a dollar, or win all of those nickles that were placed behind that little window.

My friend was not doing much better, if that is any consolation. He was after the jackpot too. After losing the coins that he had won, he kept getting change and putting more nickles in.

"I'll hit it pretty soon," said my friend sweating a little now and not from the heat.

"I'll get another drink," I said. "Might as well drink my money up as put it in the machine. One vice is as bad as another. I thought to myself, "Strange laws they have. A man can buy all the whiskey he can afford, and many persons under the influence of the liquor will rob, molest, and injure. Not counting the manslaughter charges against the drunken drivers everyday."

All of a sudden my friend jumped up in the air and at the same time tried to place his hands in front of the pay-off slot.

How a man can run up and push the same time is beyond me, but that was what he was trying to do.

Nickles flew everywhere, and he began picking them up, tugging at my overcoat all the same time, overjoyed. People turned around staring; some coming over, congratulating him on his good fortune. I stood there, wanting to pinch myself for not going in with him.

"I told you I was going to hit the jackpot," I blurted out. "I know when these machines are going to pay off. How you doing on that one?" he inquired.

"Yes, am I doing?" I almost shouted but caught myself just in time. "Come in, let's have another drink. That's two more dollars the machines owe me now..."

Rockefeller Report

WASHINGTON (AP)—Four months after it was submitted, the war department has finally made public Winthrop Rockefeller's report on veterans, white and colored. Mr. Rockefeller gave an exclusive story on his 18,000 mile tour to the Associated Negro Press in which he deplored the plight of the Negro generally and especially the Negro veteran.

In his report, Mr. Rockefeller recommended the establishment of an over all agency to coordinate the 15 agencies dealing with veterans affairs. Secretary Patterson is believed ready to act on Mr. Rockefeller's suggestion.

At the time, it was felt that Mr. Rockefeller would head up such an agency were it approved and established. Since his report was submitted, he has returned to his office with the Standard Oil Company of New York. Whether he will be amenable to accepting the leadership of this proposed bureau is unknown at this time. He entered the armed forces as a private, but on his discharge had attained the rank of major.

Mr. Rockefeller is interested in employment of veterans and the elimination of the present G. I. bill which does not "provide for tion requested of the applicant has no bearing upon his qualifications as a physician and the fact that the information requested by one school is almost identical with that of the other, lead to the unescapable conclusion that the various professional schools were extremely anxious to elicit information which would enable them to ascertain the 'racial origin' or 'religion' of the various applicants for a purpose other than judging their qualifications for admission.

Councilman Hart's report castigates Columbia and Cornell Medical Schools for destroying in recent years all records of rejected applicants for admission. The report states:

"For at least the past ten years charges have been brought against colleges and professional schools to the effect that they have been practicing discrimination against applicants for admission because of their religion or racial origin."

"All of the colleges thus accused vigorously denied the truth of these accusations and asserted that they were without foundation."

"Under the circumstances, it is fair to assume that the college or institution claiming that the accusations of discriminations were unjust would assiduously guard the records which would result in their exculpation."

"It is a well established principle of law that destruction of or failure to produce records concerning material matters raises a presumption that the contents of the records if produced would be unfavorable."

Councilman Hart quotes the "Horner Report" of the Council on Dental Education which alleged that the student body of New York University School of Dentistry "is made up overwhelmingly of one racial strain." Shortly after the receipt of this report in May 1944, Chancellor Chase of N. Y. U. asked Dr. Allen T. Newman, Dean of the Dental School to initiate discriminatory practices in the admission of students.

Dr. Newman told the Committee: "I refused to change the policy of accepting students on any basis except their qualifications, and when faced with the necessity of doing so, I resigned."

In November 1946, after the Hart Committee had begun its investigation, the Council of Dental Education of the American Dental Association disavowed the Horner report and stated that application of a quota system in admissions would "violate a fundamental principle of democracy, would transgress the essence of human freedom and would deny the proper exercise of a basic human right."

From May 1944 to November 1946 the basic human rights of many applicants for dental schools were no doubt violated by the declaration of the American Dental Association in its "Horner Report" that the Council believes that determinations should be made on a national scale to counteract the trend toward marked racial and geographic imbalance." Councilman Hart states:

"By the Dental Council waited two years, during which time the 'basic human rights' of many properly qualified students were being violated is a matter for the American Dental Association to explain."

Dental schools paid heed to the A. D. A.'s opinions on "racial balance" because of the Council's threat to take from them their accredited status, the Committee's report explains.

This system of accreditation by both the American Dental Assn. and the American Medical Assn. "is actually usurping the prerogatives of the various State Departments of Education throughout the country."

"The public, in general, suffers from lack of a sufficient number of medical practitioners throughout the country," Councilman Hart asserts, because of the refusal of the AMA to accredit additional medical schools. While the population of the country has increased since 1905 by 75 percent, the number of medical schools has declined by half and the number of graduating doctors has remained static.

Pointing to the shortage of doctors in many communities during the war and after, the report states:

"The Committee believes that proper action should be taken by the various states to remedy the situation which exists. It does not believe that the growth in the number of medical schools through out the country and the number of students graduating should depend upon arbitrary rulings of the American Medical Association, which is not an official body. The Committee's investigation of higher education throughout the country, which led to its recommendation for a State University, revealed that New York ranks last in the money it expends in relation to its income and number of students.

N. W.—I always read your col first. I am 24 years old and have twin boys. My husband and I are divorced. Six months ago I met a swell man and two months ago I met another swell fellow. I do really love the last man. He is much younger than the first. The first is 40 and the last is 26 and both of them love me very much and both want to marry me. I don't want to hurt either one as they are so nice. Tell me what to do?

Ans: Don't lose your head. I don't have to tell you that a marriage without love holds no promise of happiness. So, if you can not return the older man's love, do not accept his favors, break off with him as gracefully as you can. As to the man your age, you must find out if he is willing to share your responsibility and lot your your two boys. A divorcee and mother to boot, can not

L. J.—I have completed the 10th grade at school and have been out two years. At the beginning of each term I thought I would return but didn't. I am beginning to think if I am going to get an education I will have to provide it for myself. I want to take typing or nursing on a business course or something where I can earn a living. Tell me what to do? I have been thinking of trying to work my way through some school.

Ans: A very excellent and commendable idea. Go back to school and get that diploma. A part time job after school hours and Saturdays will see you thru. After graduation, you can take a vocational evening school course in the work of your choice. Willful dreaming is not enough though. S.S.—return to school this mid-winter term, no more stalling.
