Fishing Not So Good In Hot Weather

Fishing, throughout the state, is entering a period that is disturbing to most fishermen. High summer temperatures are the signal flags of the so-called "doldrum period", in which fishing success is at its poorest. Most of us attribute this unproductive period to the heat and let it go at that. High water temperatures have a great deal to do with the poor summer fishing, but there is another reason that is equally important. This other major factor affecting the fishing success is the newly hatched crop of minnows and insects. Within a period of a few weeks the larger fish find themselves literally in a "land of plenty". Millions and millions of newly hatched minnows and insects provide plenty of food for the game fish.

When you are fishing during this period, your bait is actually competing with this new food supply and your chance of catching fish is greatly reduced.

Most kinds of game fish move into deeper water during the daytime. If you are fishing during the day, get your bait down to where the fish are. Don't just guess at a certain depth and fish there all day. Keep trying different depths until you locate the fish.

Probably the best time to fish during the summer is in the early morning around dawn and in the evening around sundown. If the fish are going to come into the shallow water and feed near the surface, it will probably be during these cool parts of the day.

Often, when the larger game fish like bass and walleyes are not hitting, the smaller panfish such as the bluegills and crappie can be taken in the shallows around sunset. Many fishermen have been pleasantly surprised with their first experience with these scrappy panfish on light tackle.

Night time fishing will pay good dividends on most kinds of fish. Bottom feeders, such as the bullheads and catfish, are probably the most common kinds of fish caught during the night.

Although we all gripe about the hot weather slowing the fishing success down, it probably works out better than we realize. If we spend our time fishing when we have the best chance to catch something; we find we are out during the most enjoyable times of the day. Not many of us will sit very long in a boat on a hot summer day.
