Baldness Seems To Be Hereditary

Baldness seems to run in families and affects both males and females. Many men are bald, especially those advanced in years. The follicles from which the hair grows become destroyed. In such conditions there is no hope of improvement. Those who do brain work and lead sedentary lives usually become bald earlier than those who exercise vigorously and are more exposed to the open air.

We have all seen people who lost their hair as a result of sickness, especially prolonged fevers such as typhoid, intermittent malaria, etc. It is quite common for the hair to fall out during a severe illness from any cause.

Nervous conditions often produce baldness. The hair has frequently turned snow-white as the result of grief, or from a severe shock. As a rule the color is never restored.

Where the baldness is due to a temporary condition, the hair can sometimes be induced to grow back as the health of the patient improves.

Many conditions of the scalp cause the hair to fall out. Some skin diseases are particularly prone to attack the scalp and cause baldness. X-ray will cause the hair to fall out. If the exposures are not to long continued the hair grows again.

Ringworm of the scalp and other parasitic diseases are very hard to cure and cause a patch form of baldness. This kind of Alopecia (baldness) is very common, especially in Europe.

In order to cure baldness, the cause must be discovered and removed. We do not know the cause of hereditary alopecia but members of the same family are often afflicted with dandruff. This is easily spread by using the same combs and brushes or even the same towels.

Scrupulous cleanliness is necessary to hair health. Vigorous brushing improves the circulation and brings the blood to the roots, where it flourishes and the hair follicles and makes the hair grow. Consequently, anything that tends to bring the blood to the scalp helps to cure or prevent dandruff.

When the patient is suffering from the result of illness or wasting diseases, he must be built up by food and proper tonics. The scalp should also be treated by vigorous massage, and exposure to air and light rays.

If the hair is dry, a suitable emollient should be well rubbed in each day. Crude oil or yellow vaseline is excellent and brings good results.

If the hair is annoyingly oily, some tonic containing alcohol is excellent for stimulating the scalp and removing some of the oiliness. This treatment helps the nerves that control nutrition, and brings blood to nourish the scalp. It will often induce a new growth of hair.

Russia's Farm Acreage About Same As U.S.'s

(Fourth in a series of seven articles on Russian agriculture by Dr. W. V. Lambert, dean of the University of Nebraska College of Agriculture who headed the U. S. 12-man delegation on a 10,000-mile tour behind the Iron Curtain.)

Although the Soviet Union is approximately two and a half times larger than the United States, its total acreage of good agriculture land is about the same as ours. Much of their land is in the north and this is mostly tundra. They have large acreages on which they farm in the summer, but it still in the permafrost area, where the frost is never completely out of the subsoil.

The Russians have a great variety of crops, from citrus fruits in the southern Caucasus to mosses which are used for reindeer production in the far north. Wheat is their principal crop. At least it covers the largest acreage. They produce rye, barley, and are putting in large acreages of corn, particularly in the Ukraine.

We saw some excellent corn in the Kuban section which I estimated would make about 80 bushels per acre. But this is

Auditorium Scene Of Assembly

The Omaha Civic Auditorium served as a Kingdom Hall for Jehovah's Witnesses from eastern and central Nebraska last weekend. The convention was held to provide training for the ministerial delegates and had for its theme, "Right Kind of Ministers."

Mr. L. E. Reusch of New York City served as chairman and was the featured speaker. In his opening address: "Qualified for the Ministry," Mr. Reusch said: "The Christian message was simple in Jesus' day, so simple that fishermen, housewives, and carpenters could understand and become ministers of good news in a very short time, after a period of training. It is so today. There is no reason why any normally intelligent person who recognizes his Christian duty cannot be adequately qualified. It is a matter of recognizing the source of instruction, putting forth the effort, and being properly trained by qualified ministers."

Thereafter, the program was concerned with instruction in training and qualifying students to be the Right Kind of Ministers. Each congregation represented will apply the methods outlined in its own weekly Ministry School. An outstanding feature of the assembly was the ordination of thirty three new ministers on Saturday afternoon. These ministers will take up their duties in various cities and towns in Nebraska that go to make up Nebraska Circuit Number 1.

The principle address of the assembly, "Overcoming the Fears of This Generation" was delivered on Sunday afternoon by Mr. Reusch to a crowd of 1,368. "Fear is a normal, God given human emotion," Mr. Reusch declared. "If exercised in the proper way it is healthful, clean and a safe guard to life. The fear that has gripped this generation is not a clean, life saving fear but a degrading, demoralizing fear," he continued.

For being calm and serene in the face of the fears of this generation Mr. Reusch presented five points. Fear of God rather than fear of men; knowledge of the fact that we are in the last days of this system and that God's promised deliverance is near; faith in Jehovah's power to deliver; loving one's neighbor by telling him of God's promises rather than fearing him; and associating with a fearless people trusting in God's promise of a New World.

He concluded by saying, "Armageddon will remove all cause for fear. The only fear then will be the clean, healthful fear of Jehovah."

not typical. Ordinarily their fields wouldn't produce anything near that figure. The 80-bushel corn was probably of open-pollinated type. They have actually done very little in the field of hybrids. The hybrids they are using are based on inbreds where the inheritance has not been well fixed through long inbreeding. We saw corn in much of the Ukraine, from north of Kharkov to the Black Sea. In much of that area the corn was relatively short and never will produce as much corn as grain. Most of these regions are deficient in rain fall. In the Ukraine the rainfall varies from 16 to 18 inches. The soils in the Ukraine and Kuban sections are rich, both of prairie origin. With wheat, they have done a good job. They're working hard and I think you'll see further progress. This year we saw a number of fields that would make 30 to 40 bushels. But this was an exceedingly good year for them. They had an abundance of rainfall, in fact rainfall was so much above normal that we saw a considerable amount of lodging in many fields. They plant mostly spring wheat. I asked a good many questions about plant and wheat diseases. They said they had some rust but it wasn't troublesome. I didn't discover any signs that they have serious problems with insects. The Russians produce many sugar beets and what we saw seemed to be of good quality. They were mostly dry-land beets. Also potatoes are widely grown. Every collective farm produces enough potatoes for its own people and some in addition. The Russians like potatoes, in fact potatoes make up a big part of their diet. And then there were the oil crops, which are very important to the Soviet Union. We saw many fields of sunflowers, their principal oil crop. We saw fields of flax from which they get their linseed oil and many acres of castor beans which they use for industrial oils; perhaps, for their specialized machinery and their Navy. But considering their crop program as a whole I would say that their biggest problems are getting better crop rotations, and developing mineral fertilizer resources. Actually they're using very little mineral fertilizers at the moment except in cotton and few of the high value crops. They have a long way to go in developing corn, oats and rye.

Ice Fishing Shelter
WITH a portable, knockdown ice fishing shelter, anglers can enjoy the winter sport in comfort, protected from cold winds. Easily built with sturdy Masonite Tempered Presdwood panels, which assure a long life, the structure may be heated. It has a plastic window which of course may be darkened, if desired, by means of a shade. Since only seven panels are involved, there is a minimum of construction, hauling, setup and knockdown. They can be hauled atop an automobile or in a pickup truck.

An interesting feature is that the panels are fastened together with screen-couplings. No nuts and bolts are needed, so there's nothing to become lost and no fumbling around in key weather getting the panels set up. Construction is easy, too, as there are only four different patterns for the seven panels. If desired, a stovepipe hole may be cut in one of the wall panels. Naturally, the hole must be protected by an asbestos collar. Application of a primer and two finish coats of paint complete the "house on ice."
