By INEZ GERHARD-ANS

PATTI BOSWORTH stepped from doing television commercials right into her first dramatic role in that medium, as the 16-year-old Cindy Clayton in "Concerning Miss Marlowe" (NBC-TV weekday afternoons), starring Louise Allbritton. But she had plenty of preparation; actually 18, she's a professional model, and has worked in many summer productions. She played the lead in such plays as "Ah Wilderness," "The Barrets of Wimpole Street" and "Liljon." She is the daughter of Bartley Crum—the lawyer representing Rita Hayworth and Dick Haymes—and of novelist Gertrude Bosworth Crum, but has made good on her own.

FLORENCE FREEMAN

walked straight into her first big part; a friend dared her to try out for a radio part against seasoned professionals. She did and landed a leading role on a network show. She had taken courses in dramatic and stage production while preparing to teach school. Now starring in "Wendy Warren and the News" (CBS, 12:00, weekdays), she portrays a woman who tries to mix marriage and a career, which she does capably in real life. The wife of a clergyman and mother of three children, she schedules her broadcasting activities for daytime, and has the evenings free for her family.

SPRING BYINGTON

is going to do right by mothers-in-law, beginning October 4, over the CBS-TV network. After appearing in 15 movies and some 30 Broadway plays, she will star in "December Bride"—and it must look awfully good, for it's been given a perfect spot—the time right after "I Love Lucy," formerly filled by Red Buttons. She will portray an attractive, middle-aged mother-in-law, who has no difficulty in attracting marriageable middle-aged men, sometimes to the great embarrassment of her daughter, and son-in-law. Being herself, she'll do it with charm, humor and great talent.

Spot on a Spout

A SIMPLE but ingenious means of oiling hard-to-reach locations was illustrated in Popular Mechanics. A reproduction of the drawing here shows an oil can spout extension which is a length of 1/4" neoprene tubing. With it, the oiling of the blower shaft of a forced-air furnace or behind the wheels of a lawn mower becomes easy. It is useful, too, in oiling inaccessible spots in a motorcar.

Ice Fishing Shelter

WITH a portable, knockdown ice fishing shelter, anglers can enjoy the winter sport in comfort, protected from cold winds. Easily built with sturdy Masonite Tempered Presdwood panels, which assure a long life, the structure may be heated. It has a plastic window which of course may be darkened, if desired, by means of a shade.

Since only seven panels are involved, there is a minimum of construction, hauling, setup and knockdown. They can be hauled atop an automobile or in a pickup truck.

An interesting feature is that the panels are fastened together with screen-couplings. No nuts and bolts are needed, so there's nothing to become lost and no fumbling around in icy weather getting the panels set up. Construction is easy, too, as there are only four different patterns for the seven panels. If desired, a stovepipe hole may be cut in one of the wall panels. Naturally, the hole must be protected by an asbestos collar.

Application of a primer and two finish coats of paint complete the "house on ice."
