TRET'S GREAT LEAP.

as she had been no more than a babe when Mrs. Ferguson died.

The girl was small, but still she was wonderfuly developed. She had the nerve of a man, and her strength and quickness were really astonishing. Sometimes she would laughingly invite me to feel of her muscle. Old Ferguson was a reserved man, rather sullen and suspicious toward strangers. Still, he seemed to be educated, and I wondered why he lived there in that lonely mountain but, so far from civil-There was something strange about it. One time I asked him:

"Why don't you move to Bozeman or Helena? What is your idea of living here where nobody can find you?" He shot me a queer look.

"Mebbe that's what I want," he grunted. What?

"Nobody to find me." If I had not known him well, I might have taken that as a hint; but I knew I was always welcome at Ferguson's.

"You seem to forget Little Tret," I expostulated. "It is scarcely right to bring her up here without any advantages.

"Waal, I dunno 'bout that," he returned. "Gals brought up in big places don't alwus turn out for the best; an' thar hain't no temptations fer Tret hyar. She kin enjoy the free air, the sunshine, the birds an' flowers, an' I won't hev ter watch fer snakes all ther time-human snakes, I mean."

"But her schooling-"Say, Swift, you'll muddle me all up, an' get me ter thinkin o' things as don't keer to. I wish you'd drop it." And he would never talk on the subfect again. In the course of time I came to surmise there was a mystery connected with old Ferguson's life, and that he lived in that secluded spot for a reason.

But I never questioned him. I knew it would be useless. In time, however, he partly revealed his secret. He had an enemy-a deadly foewho had hunted him for years. He did not explain why the man was his enemy; but I came to suspect that the dead Mrs. Ferguson had something to do with it. "Ther onery whelp'll find me ag'in some day!" the hermit declared. "When he does thar's goin' ter be a recker-

STILL CLINGING TO THE OPEN UMBRELLA.

I sprang from my horse, but no one met me at the door. Then I hurried into the cabin.

There was a huddled figure sitting on a stool in one corner.

As I entered the figure moved, and a haggard, ghastly face, with wildly-glaring eyes, looked up at me.

There was no recognition in those Yet Ferguson was before me. "For God's sake, what is the matter, man?" I cried aghast. He mumbied something I did not un-I leaped forward and caught him by the shoulder, giving him a fierce shake,

"What's happened? Tretty---" "Gone! "Gone where? Dead?"

"Worse!" I saw the man was almost perished from exhaustion and hunger, First I gave him a little watered whisky, and then I made him cat something.

"Now tell me what has happened?" commanded. His shaking hands fumbled in his pockets, and he brought out a scrap of dirty paper.

On the paper, scrawled by a lend pencil, were these words. "I've found you at last, Harris! You stole the mother, now I will steal the daughter. You'll never see your girl again, and Ben Raven has his revenge, She's mine, and you know what I mean by that." "Explain it!" was my demand. "How came you by this?"

"Found it hyar." "When?"

"Week ago. Was away six hours. Came back-found that-Tret gone! I've hunted everywhar! I'll never see my little girl ag'in!" I knew Ferguson was an expert trailer, and he was familiar with the mountains. It looked as if his enemy had triumphed.

But I did my best to give him new life and courage. I kept at him till he was in much beiter shape than when I found him.

The reader may not believe in luck, but I do. I have seen too many strange freaks of eards not to believe in it.

Luck was with us that day. Old Ferguson had scoured the mountains all about, and he did not believe his child was within hundreds of miles of his cabin.

We were riding through a canyon about twenty-five miles from the cabin. At our left ran a strong, deep stream.

On either hand the walls of the canyon rose perpendicularly.

A sudden scream caused us to look up. On the opposite side of the stream, far up the face of the canyon wall, was a big black opening.

In the blackness of this opening a

ing my arm. Then something astounding happened. The girl suddenly opened a huge umbrella, and, in another moment, clinging fast to the handle, she sprang out from the opening. As she did this a man came into view, and clutched at her.

He missed. Then we saw him reeling on the verge, rying to gain his balance once more.

Like a flash Ferguson flung up his riffe, and fired. With a hoarse shrick of horror the man fell outward, and came whirling

He passed the girl, who was descending swiftly but steadily, still clinging to the open umbrella, which served as a parachute. Into the river I urged my horse,

The man had struck with a great splash, and disappeared. The girl followed.

She relinquished the umbrella and swam toward me,

I picked her up.

Little Tret was saved. She told us her story as we sat before the open fire in Old Ferguson's cabin that night. The man had taken her to a cave which was the retreat of several rufflans and robbers. Their booty was stored there.

Amid the stuff was a big government umbrella. The regular entrance to the cave was guarded, but they did not guard the opening into the canyon, as there seemed no possibility of any one entering or leaving that way.

Tret had heard of parachutes, and she conceived a desperate plan for escape. Raven was tormenting her when she was driven to put her plan to the test.

It happened we were passing at that ery moment. Whether Ferguson's bullet reached his enemy or not could not be known, but certain it is that Raven disappeared, and never troubled Little Tret or her father afterward. Being satisfied his enemy was dead, "Ferguson" resumed his right name of Harris, and moved to Bozeman. There Tret attended school, and she

Why Napoleon Was Angry and Refused to Ride . As to Maj. Poppleton's letter, dated March 15, 1817, it may be stated that some little sensation had recently been says the Centleman's Magazine.

Alluding to this circumstance Maj. P.

writes: "With regard to my encounter with sequence of his riding at a very great rate I lost sight of him altogether, but, being perfectly satisfied as to his ultimate safety, I did not trouble myself about him, but left him to return to Longwood when he pleased. This he did in due course. I afterward related what had happened to Admiral Sir George Cockburn and he desired of me In the course of a day or two he (Bonaparte) sent to me to say he wished to ride. I sent word to him that I should attend him with pleasure, but that for the future I should ride near him if I chose, not as his servant; that I should behave toward him with every delicacy possible; that I would not interrupt nor listen to his conversation, and if a wish were expressed by him to be left alone it should be complied with. The horses were immediately unsaddled, his breakfast equipage was unloaded and he gave out that he was unwell. We have never ridden together since. A most terrible business was made of it all, but not a word of truth in the whole of it. The French officers who were with him were determined at that time to misrepresent everything and to make him dislike the English. In this they completely succeeded for a length of time, but Napoleon has for some time past been of a contrary opinion and expressed himself highly pleased with myself personally. I have no doubt but that all I desired to be told him was misconstrued."

A Bicyclienne.

Saturday afternoon passengers on a north-bound limits car going past Lincoln park saw a large, odd-shaped object flitting among the trees and moving along a distant driveway in the same direction as the car.

"It moves like a bicycle, but the top part is too big for a man," said one. "Maybe he's got a load of hay on his back," said another.

"I bet that's the fat bicycle agent," was the inspiration of the man who spoke first. As the object sailed along people wondered. Suddenly there was an opening in the trees and the object darted out into the sunshine, disclosing a combination of bicycle and a large

The Daily News reporter who was going to view the 500 feet extension of the lake shore speeding drive yearned to know more. The car steadily gained on the rider, and when it had got far enough ahead the reporter dropped off the footboard and started on a crosscountry move toward a spot where interception and an interview seemed plausible. THE ELECTRIC LIGHT.

Submarine Lamps Are Now Used by Fishermen with Success.

Eastern anglers are taking a leaf out of the book of the fishermen of the Paclfic coast. It will be remembered that an enterprising Californian was the first in the country to utilize the idea of attacking fish by means of the electric light. He had the nets for his coast fishing studded with incandescent lamps, which were connected to batteries in an accompanying boat. As soon as the nets were sunk the current was turned on, and the incandescent filament drew fish from far and near, greatly surpassing in its effects on the hauling of the net the most irresistible of baits. Now an Albany man has devised an "electrical net," which works very much after the same fashion, except that the electric light used is fixed above the water instead of below its surface. When the light is placed in position, the nets are set either to seaward of it or around it, flat upon the bottom. When the fish are drawn to the lamp a rubber tube which runs along the top of the net is inflated by a pump in the boat, the upper edge of the net will rise to the surface—the lower edge being held down by sinkers-and the fish are caught. A New Yorker has made a modification of the California plan in using submerged lights. He simply puts a three-candle-power lamp in a quart preserving jar, lowers it in the water, and runs it with a sewing machine battery. He recommends those who wish to follow his example not to spend $20 on a battery, but buy an electric handbook and, with three goblets securely fastened in a plain wooden box, make for themselves for about $2.50 a battery which works just as well. He says that night fishing becomes a very lively sport if the light is placed anywhere in the neighborhood of fish. They swim around and spend considerable time investigating, but as soon as their curiosity is satisfied, they get down to business and discuss the baited hook which is dangling near-by. -Exchange.

ELECTRICITY AT SEA.

The White Light Is Proved to Be the

One the Easiest and Best Seen. Some interesting experiments have been made on the visibility of the electric light at sea by the government of the United States, Germany and the Netherlands. The word "visible" in the report on the tests means visible on a dark night with a clear atmosphere. The result of the experience of the German committee was that a and one mile on a rainy night. The American tests resulted as follows: In very clear weather a light of one candle power was plainly visible at one nautical mile; one of three candle power at bicycle it cannot be utilized for cantwo miles; one of ten candle power was ning, as the horse now is .- Portland seen by the aid of a binocular at four Oregonian. miles; one of twenty-nine candle powccasioned in the island by the reputed | er faintly at five miles, and one of thir-"losing" of Napoleon by that officer ty-three candle power plainly at five when accompanying him on one of his miles. Delicious Tuscan Pudding. Make a boiled custard with one pint of milk, sweetened with half a cup of sugar, boiled and poured on three beaten eggs, writes Elizabeth Robinson Scovil. Return the mixture to the saucepan and stir until it thickens, but do not let it curdle as it will if it boils for more than a second. When cool add one pint of cream, half a cup of sugar, a quarter of a box of gelatine, dissolved and strained, half a teaspoonful of vanilla, a quarter of a teaspoonful of essence of lemon, twenty drops of extract of bitter almond. Put in a mould with smooth sides and pack in ice and salt. The proportion is two quarts of broken ice to one of coarse salt, well mixed. In an hour remove the mould, and after wiping it carefully uncover it, and with a knife scrape the frozen cream from the sides. Beat it thoroughly, as this makes the texture fine and smooth. If it is nearly frozen add half a pound of sweet almonds, blanched and chopped fine, half a pound of candled ginger, cut in small pieces, and half a pound of citron prepared in the same way.

Increase in Number of Lives Lost. General Dumont, of the United States steamboat inspection service has records to show that during the last fiscal year the number of lives lost on steam vessels approximately was 368. This was an increase over the average of the preceding 18 years of 128. The great increase was caused by the large loss of life by the foundering of the steamship Colima recently off the Pacific coast. The average for the last 19 years is 247. The highest previous annual loss was 586, in 1874; the lowest was 133, in 1886.
