LEFT AND RIGHT HANDEDNESS.

Explained by Anntomical Reasons for Same Quality in Eyes.

It is a well-known race that the stronger activity of the nerves of the right half of the body (for not only the hand is concerned) must be ascribed o a preponderance of the left side of the brain, whose finer development, especially as the seal of the center of special is a matter of common knowledge, says the London Optician.

In a paper by Dr. Luddeckens in the Alleraelnes Journal der Chrinacherconst valuable information regarding the causes of the unequal working of he two hemispheres of the brain is furnished. A sketch touching on the hisbory of evolution leads from the original inal symmetry of the organism to a suosequent disymmetrical arrangement of the heart and the large blood yessels, from which it follows quite harurally that the two halves of the head are not placed on an equal-rooting asregards the distribution of the blood and consequently of the blood pressure. and that, on the contrary, there must be, under normal conditions, a stronger pressure on the arteries of the left side of the head.

This theory is borne out by well known experiences of anatomists and pathologists and a series of interesting, man over there. All his intimate friends observations.
