THE DESIRE FOR STORIES.

From the "Once Upon a Time" Stage to "That Reminds Me."

Our earliest instinct is to ask for a story, our latest to tell one unasked, ed." On another page she writes, "I am Human life is bounded at either end by a phrase; "once upon a time" at one His promises are sure. And toward the end, "that reminds me" at the other close of her long helplessness, extended Above the first instinct we rise graduover some twelve years, patiently endur- ally, gradually decharag to the second ed and sweetly sustained by God's all suf. Not that the marrative sense ever dies in us; only that in the plenitude of our powers we are not satisfied with a story that is nothing more than a story, a parrative for parration's sake.

The mind of a child is all agape for facts, for it is empty, and nothing is so quickly filling, so easily assimilable, as a dish of facts. Facts of fiction are preferred by the child to actual facts because they satisfy also its strong im aginative sense. Its moral and intel lectual senses are still in abeyance. Do duce from any story "a moral" or an idea, and the child runs away rudeis There lies the difference between as and it. Our moral and intellectual senses are flourishing, and by their strength ove immediation is propor tionately weakened. Grings is not enough for us. Our moral sense cries aloud for Hans Andersen. Dimms leaves us cold. Our mind needs Baizac. It is not enough for us that once upon a time there were three princesses or three musketeers who suffered or did some queer things. We want those triads to illustrate, to symbolize, to mean something, to corroborate or upset some theory that we have formed,

Such are the prime needs of our maturity. Comes Time, mowing away with his scythe our intellectual and moral curiosity; nor does he restore to us our old imagination. He crops us bare of all but experience. Things that have happened-especially, old egoists that we are, the things that have happened to ourselves-are the only things that rouse us from our lethargy. "Anecdotage" is an ugly phrase. "Second childhood," less harsh, is not less exactly descriptive. For our last state, the state where narrative is absolute despot, was our first state too .- Max Beerbohm in Saturday Review.
