(Special Correspondence)

Washington, May 12.—Extend the hand of sympathy to Governor Magoon, of the Panama Canal zone, O, ye of Nebraska. For if an amendment to the diplomatic and consular bill agreed to by the House committee this week becomes a law, the rotund Nebraskan and Pooh-Bah of the isthmus will be shorn at one fell stroke of $17,000 a year in salaries. The committee amendment provides that no part of the moneys appropriated by the bill shall be paid to any ambassador or minister who receives any other salary from the government. This is aimed directly at Governor Magoon, who draws $10,000 a year as governor, with an additional $10,000 as Minister to Panama and $7,000 as member of the Canal Commission. Two of these salaries will be cut off if the bill goes through as amended, and Minister Magoon must needs struggle along on a paltry $10,000 per annum.

"Uncle Joe" Cannon's seventieth birthday anniversary celebration this week will go down in history as one of the most democratic affairs ever held at the capital. Practically all official Washington was invited to offer congratulations to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and practically all official Washington was present. Foreign diplomats marvelled at the freedom of the gathering and the total absence of formalities. Everyone followed the example of "Uncle Joe" and lighted cigars. In consequence a pall of blue-gray smoke hung heavy in the big room at the Arlington when President Roosevelt, unescorted, elbowed his way through the press to grasp the Speaker's hand. It was the one touch needful to show the complete democracy of the occasion, for the President chatted and laughed and shoved his way around in the crush the same as any other invited guest. He was of secondary importance to the guest of honor. Incidently, a band of boomers were up from Danville, Ill., the Speakers home town, to keep before the public the fact that while "Uncle Joe" has made an excellent Speaker he would make even a better President.

L. E. McBride and his wife, who left their home in Aurora, Nebraska, July 13, 1905, are preparing to take their way back after a long trip through the country in a covered wagon. McBride is 70 years old while his wife is twenty-one years his junior, and they claim to have enjoyed every hour of their pilgrimage. The couple has averaged about twenty miles a day,—just enough to keep the horses in good condition, and their jaunt has been in pursuit of pleisure solely. During their journey McBride says they have travelled through Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia. They now are on their way to view the broad Atlantic, after which they will turn homeward. McBride is growing a trifle anxious for another glimpse of his home town and while he is enthusiastic over his experiences in the South he declares there is no place like Nebraska. The couple left Washington this week on their way to the sea. They expect to return through the capital on their way west.

Now that the labor of the Senate with the rate bill is finished the northern wing of the Capitol, where the debate on this weighty question has continued for more than two months, is pervaded with a spirit of relief. There is little tendency to attempt to interpret the measure as a victory for any one faction. The almost unanimous verdict is that the bill affords a satisfactory solution of a difficult problem, and one Senator expressed himself happily when he remarked that he regarded the bill as a victory for the American people and constitutional government. In whatever retrospection is indulged in, however, it is conceded that the President has been the dominating factor throughout the whole question, and that his acceptance of the so-called Allison amendment, far from being a surrender or a departure from the position which he early assumed and from which he has never wavered, was a step entirely in keeping with his policy as defined in his speeches on this subject. The President always has understood that a failure to provide for a review of the orders of the Commission by the courts would in all probability render the bill unconstitutional, and by his own expression he accepted the Allison amendment to avoid the danger of the bill becoming void. The action of President Roosevelt cannot be construed as anything save a wise move at a well chosen time to point the way to certain radical Senators who were running amuck.

Consul Atwell, of Roubaix, France, has reported to the Department of Commerce and Labor that a young French engineer has inveuted a wireless apparatus that promises to revolutionize not only telegraphy but warfare as well. The machine weighs less than seven pounds and costs not more than $10. It can be operated without masts or poles and is incapable of being interrupted by other wireless messages. The wonderful feature of the system, however, lies in the manner in which force-waves can be propelled great distances. It is said to be capable of exploding torpedoes at a distance and of driving them toward their mark or bringing them back at will, and of lighting electric lamps and starting dynamos at any distance and without wires. Some marvellous tests already have been made, according to Consul Atwell, and the French minister of the navy has ordered that further and more exhaustive experiments be undertaken.

Col. John Mosby, whose daring guerillas in Civil War days were the bane of the Union army, attended the Grant birthday dinner at Boston, and during a call at the White House this week he told President Roosevelt that he couldn't have been treated better. "At the dinner I sat between two Federal soldiers whom I had captured during the war," he said. "They were so kind to me before the dinner that I began to grow sorry I had ever captured them. Before the dinner was over I had become sorry they had not captured me." Col. Mosby now is one of the most reconstructed of all reconstructed Confederates, and is a great friend of the President.

Every Niece and Nephew of Uncle Sam should be deeply interested in what he has said about soda crackers, because they are the one food with which all of them are familiar.

Uncle Sam has given out figures showing that soda crackers are richer in nutriment and body-building elements, properly proportioned, than any food made from flour.

This is saying much for common soda crackers, and much more for Uneeda Biscuit, because they are soda crackers of the best quality. They are baked better—more scientifically. They are packed better—more cleanly. The damp, dust and odor proof package retains all the goodness and nutriment of the wheat, all the freshness of the best baking, all the purity of the cleanest bakeries.

Your Uncle Sam has shown what food he thinks best for his people. His people have shown that they think Uneeda Biscuit the best of that food, nearly 400,000,000 packages having already been consumed.
