

Mr. Bryan failed in New York of being an unqualified success. convention for this district is Under the circumstances that in called to meet in this city Saturitself, was failure. The object day, the 15th, to nominate two of his reception and address was candidates for the legislature. to make him appear as the This event is one of great impordestined leader of the American people. He was to appeal to both the national judgment and imagination. The event was marred by a series of mistakes, not one of them considered in itself, but in the mass leaving destined leader of the American tance to the republican party. not one of them considered in Senator is to be elected by the itself, but in the mass leaving legislature. It is a matter of quite the opposite impression importance that men are nomifrom that intended. Honor was nated on the republican ticket shown one who has deserved well that are in sympathy with the of his country, but the tribute party progress and have the confell far short of that which a true fidence of the public, to assure ruler might inspire. His utter-ance was, in many passages, election would be doubtful, noble and wise, but as a whole and in many parts it was open to criticism. Every excuse may be made for Mr. Bryan's failure of a signal success. The pity is that excuses have to be made. The longer the incident is re-The longer the incident is re-The longer the incident is re-flected upon the stronger will be the disinclination to entrust Mr. Bryan and his counsellors with the direction of national affairs the direction of national affairs but if everything does not go in a period so critical in national their way, how many excuses the assistants of his administra- to have their own way in everyprocession through New York was not a triumph. Outside the Bowery and streets of that sort, comparatively few welcomed him. Although 60,000 applications had been made for admission to the great hall where he spoke, many of the fortunate possessors of tickets stayed away or came late or departed early, so that the first part of his address was interrupted and the really spelendid close was spoken to a decimated audience. Fundamental was the mistake of departing from the original plan of the reception and address. The great and popular commercial body which planned the reception would, if it had been allowed to do so, have kept the affair free from partizanship and would have allowed Mr. Bryan to appear as the re-presentative and champion of the people generally. Only in that character can he hope for success in his ambition to be the national leader. As it was, the democracy was rampant, and Mr. Bryan by making a partizan moral people in order to achieve speech flung away one of the greatest opportunities-perhaps the case here in Nebraska. the greatest opportunity-of his life. "I favor the control of the trunk lines by the government France became effective Septemand the ownership of all other railroads by the state govern-ment," said Mr. Bryan. In an instant thousands of voices were raised and faces turned toward the side of the building—opposite the speakers stand—where Wil-liam Randolph Hearst sat. "Three cheers for Hearst" was the cry that swelled until Mr. Bryan's voice was drowned and he was unable to continue for several minutes. The intended oration for Mr. Bryan turned out a triumph for Mr. Bryan turned out a triumph for Mr. Bryan sad-is democracy, full of internal strife and with the representative of its ideals.
