SOME people there are who appear ignorant of the fact that there are no pockets in a shroud.

Now WAIT for the Thanksgiving table groaning with good things to eat, and the small boy groaning who has eaten them.

THE St. Louis girl who married a so-called count in the east the other day has made the discovery that his title is a spurious one. At that he can not turn out worse than many of the foreign nobleman married by American girls, and whose titles are the only things about them free of flaw and blemish.

AN overzealous anti-divisionist in conversation the other day remarked that he couldn't see why the Almighty ever made Col. Brega. David Harrum said the Almighty never made anything in vain. "Flees," said David, "were made to keep dogs from brooding over their unhappy condition." In the Colonel's case perhaps there is a good and sufficient reason.

WHEN we read what the republican papers said about the republican candidates and what the democratic papers said about the democratic candidates, says Tim Sedgewick in the York Times, we were both glad and surprised, glad that there were so many such good men in the country and surprised that they could be induced to become candidates for office. They all have been eminently successful in private life, are so dear to their neighbors and enjoy so large a measure of respect it is certain nothing but a deep sense of duty and a strong desire to serve their fellowmen induced them to forego the prosperity and pleasures of private life for the uncertain and unremunerative public service. It was all explained later, when we read what the republican papers said about the democratic candidates and what the democratic papers said about the republican candidates.

IF THE democrats who captured Nebraska's electoral vote for Bryan and elected a democratic governor last year by 8,000 plurality had this time elected only one candidate out of the six on the state ticket by even 500, what a glorious victory the democratic organs would boast of. When, however, the republicans made a clean sweep, the low man safe, although by a close majority, of course it is no achievement at all.—Bee.

Lessons of Co-education.
In this day of violent agitation by the suffragists, when militant activities of the ore gentler sex are apt to give the impression that modern thought and higher education are making woman more of an opponent than a co-worker of man, it is worth while to look into the records of advanced womanhood in some center where the experiment has been long established. Such a fountain head is the University of Wisconsin, where co-education has been practised for nearly forty years, and where in the beginning it was prophesied that woman, given equal opportunities with man, would proceed to dominate his established field.

An advanced woman, summarizing the results both in the Wisconsin university and among the graduates, finds that the man has continuously maintained his chosen domination as of old. For instance, woman has steadily diverged from political economy, though at first attracted by the idea that therein might lie her emancipation from thralldom, but after a little investigation, she concludes that the prerogatives of her own sex yield her something better than she discovers in the prerogatives of masculinity, and she declines to trade. Therefore we behold, in college, and in after life, the man maintaining his leadership in practical and hard-headed affairs, numerically and vitally at the fore in the serious business of life, and its ramifications.

Woman, however, as from the beginning is steadfast to the more ornamental or aesthetic occupations and interests, leaving the political and economic problems for the men. Where man shuns belles-lettres and other elegant studies or pursuits, woman neglects the very matters into which the militant suffragists would drive them.

This demonstration from the field of thorough experiment and long experience will encourage the country's multitude of old-fashioned housewives and mothers in the faith that their daughters will continue to be the complement of the nation's sons rather than arrayed against them.—Bee.

The Mondell Homestead Lands.

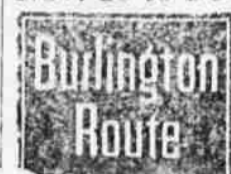

We are receiving thousands of inquiries about the 320 acre free homestead lands available for settlers under the Mondell Act. These lands are located in Eastern Colorado and in Wyoming along the Burlington. The great advantage of this new homestead law is that the settler is permitted to take up free, 320 acres instead of 160 acres, the larger tract being required under the new dry farming methods: Northeastern Wyoming has from 16 to 21 inches of moisture, and has produced some of the finest crops of small grains ever seen in the west.

I personally conduct excursions on the first and third Tuesday of each month to these lands. Write me for special descriptive folders, literature, etc.

Irrigated Lands in the Big Horn Basin.
These government irrigated lands are being fast taken up by settlers who realize the coming value of the Big Horn Basin lands in view of the railroad development in Central Wyoming.

The U. S. Land and Irrigation Exposition at Chicago, Nov. 20 to Dec. 4th, will be of vital interest to the farmer.

The rice fields are flooded by means of artesian wells and is considered a highly profitable crop.

that were going begging at from $5 to $10 an acre. Most of them laughed at him but here and there a man nibbled and straightway saw his land grow in value ten fold in less than ten years. A number of men out there who had faith all the time, as well as little money, are now worth anywhere from a hundred thousand to half a million, with here and there a fellow who could cash in for almost a million if he cared to do so.—State Journal.
