

be perfect. It was difficult, if not impossible to ascertain the cost of production here and abroad of every article produced by or imported into this country. And while we had much fuller information than any preceding Congress ever had, in the very nature of things this information could not in every case be exact.

The Payne law provides for a tariff board, and largely through the efforts of President Taft the powers of this board have been so greatly extended as to cover the investigation of these questions; and if Congress shall in the future vote for sufficient appropriations, I have no doubt that when it may become necessary to revise the tariff again it will have through this board, the fullest and most complete information upon which to base a tariff readjustment. And when that time shall come I have no doubt that, provided only the Congress shall be republican the law will be as much better than the Payne law as the Payne law is better than the Dingley law. But that law will not be perfect, and the REPUBLICAN party then will be called upon to combat the floods of misrepresentation that we are combating now.

In the future, as in the past, it will be misrepresentation of the facts that the republican party has to fear and not the facts themselves. I this campaign it is misrepresentation of the facts that we have to fear and not the facts themselves. We shall have to go before the people and explain the facts with regard to this tariff law, and we will do it without distortion or demagoguery. We will not claim that this tariff is solely in the interests of the consumer; and on the other hand we will not claim that it is made solely for the benefit of the producer; but we will claim that it is in the interests of both the producer and the consumer alike.

We stand up in the proposition that the interests of the producer and the consumer are not antagonistic; that it is as much for the interest of all the producers as it is to the interest of all the consumers that all the producers should be reasonably prosperous as it is to the interest of all the consumers that all the consumers should be reasonably prosperous. For, in the long run, if the American producer can not afford to pay wages to those associated with him in production at least as high as they now are—higher, thank God than in any other country in the world—the great mass of consumers will not have the wherewithal to purchase what they are now consuming. We will not say anything to the workingman and another thing to the farmer, one thing to the salaried man and another thing to the man of means. We will say to all a common thing, that needs no repetition: American industry that needs protection.

We will show them that a part of the increase in the revenues under the Payne law are derived from increases in the duties on articles of luxury, and in no case by increases of the duties on articles of necessity. That another part is due to the imposition of a new form of taxation which will be paid entirely by men who can simply afford to pay it, and in no case by men who can not afford to pay it. That for every article of daily necessity upon which the duty has been increased the duties on 15 similar articles have been reduced and that this increase, wherever made, in order to equalize the difference in the cost of production of that article here and abroad. We will show them that for the first time in modern history, under the Payne law more than half of all the articles imported into this country come in absolutely free of duty; that upon more than $5,000,000,000 worth of articles consumed in this country the duties have been reduced, and upon less than $275,000,000 worth have they been increased. We will show them that upon no single article of wearing apparel used by the poor man, upon no single article of food on the poor man's table have the duties been increased, but on the contrary many of them have been greatly reduced. We will show them that the Payne Law is an immense improvement over the Dingley law, and that it is a compliance with the pledges of the republican platform. If we fail to do this, we shall fall divided and our opponents, the democratic party, will enjoy the fruits of victory. If we shall stand united and the fruits of victory will be ours.

N. T. GADD, Attorney. 48-30

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF CUSTER COUNTY, NEBRASKA.

In the matter of the estate of John B. Mohat, Insane. Order to show cause.

This cause came on for hearing upon the petition of Joseph B. Mohat, guardian of the estate of John B. Mohat, an insane person, praying for license to sell the NE 1/4 of Section 21, T. 18, N. of R. 20 W. 6th P. M. or a sufficient amount thereof to pay the indebtedness of said estate in the sum of $700.00 allowed against said estate, and the costs of guardianship of said insane person and this action, there being no personal property to pay said debts and expenses.

It is therefore ordered that all persons interested in said estate appear before me at Broken Bow, in Custer county, Nebraska, at ten o'clock, A. M. on the 6th day of June, 1910, to show cause why a license should not be granted to said guardian to sell the above described real estate of said insane person, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay said debts and expenses of guardianship.

Dated this 30th day of April, 1910.

BRUNO O. HOSTETLER, Judge of the District Court.
