FRANK DIXON FINISHED SCHOLAR

The "Insurgent" Chautauqua Lecturer.

Such men as Frank Dixon are preserving for this age the traditional standards established more than a generation ago for the lecture platform by Phillips, Gough and Beecher. What are the essential qualities of an ideal Chautauqua lecturer? It must be popular. Truth logically conceived, eloquently unfolded and dramatically proclaimed must appeal to any audience. The business of the successful platform man is to bring a purposeful message to his hearers and deliver it to them in language and manner understandable. He must "put his coxles on the lower shelf." An audience must feel that the speaker is the master of his theme and that he is dealing authoritatively with vital issues. Mr. Dixon realizes that dullness is not depth and that the profoundest truths may be told in the simplest manner. He does not insult his hearers with frivolous jokes, but his address is pregnant with refined humor. There is fun enough, but fun with a purpose. He requires neither stale anecdotes nor an alarm clock to keep an audience awake.

Though born, reared and educated in keeping with the traditions of a southern aristocrat Mr. Dixon has devoted the best years of his life to deep study of the social and economic questions of the day. Not so much by temperament as by his study and investigation he is an "insurgent" in the broadest sense of the word. His late popular lecture "The Square Deal," is a plea for social reconstruction. It is revolutionary but not anarchistic. He shows that governments have without exception been built on the theory that a square deal should not be accorded to the masses—special privilege the controlling principle. He assails the courts of the land in no uncertain terms and with a logic that is based upon the history of jurisprudence since the Magna Charta was wrested from the unwilling King John.

He makes an eloquent appeal for laws that will squeeze the water out of every corporation and he flays that complaisant public opinion that tolerates immunity to the rich criminal but insists upon the pound of flesh from the poor devil. "Through tattered clothes small vices do appear; Robes and furr'd gowns hide all. Plate sin with gold, And the strong lance of Justice hurtless breaks; Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it."—Shakespeare. Dr. Frank Dixon is the most finished and scholarly orator of the age and to have heard him is to have listened to the best that the American nation has ever produced. If you must miss every other number on the Chautauqua program plan to hear Frank Dixon.
