Quite a bunch of Mormons, or Latter Day Saints, have been going about the streets for the past few days. Some of them sell Mormon literature, some render vocal selections on the street corners and other ones chant. Although the Broken Bow people good-naturedly turned down the book vendors and listened on a mass to the quartette and exhortations, it would appear that converts are not much in evidence. So far as is known none of the disciples of Joseph Smith had any mining stock or western real estate to sell.

Need For Organized Forest Fire Protection among Private Owners

Washington, September 27.—One of the lessons which will be drawn from the trying experience of the present forest fire season, in the behalf of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, is the need of wider organization among private owners of timber to safe guard their holdings. It is pointed out that already in the northwest, both on the Pacific coast and in Montana and Idaho, timberland owners have formed themselves into associations which assess the members on an acreage basis and thus meet the cost of maintaining a regular fire patrol and fire fighting organization. Only by getting together can private owners usually assure themselves protection, for fire is no respecter of the boundary lines and the man who undertakes to keep it out of his own timber will want to keep it out of his neighbors too. Wherever possible the Governments forest officer-co-operate with the force put in the held by the associations, so that the employees of the Government and those of the private owners and handled practically as a unit in fighting the common enemy.

This cooperation is advantageous to both sides. Protection of the National Forests necessarily carries with it a good deal of protection of adjoining or interior holdings. If the private owners would everywhere shoulder their reasonable share of the burden, the public would gain both through more general forest conservations and through relief from the necessity of paying for the protection of private timber in order to protect its own.
