reminded of the importance of this matter by an article in the Nineteenth Century by Dr. B. W. Carpenter. He speaks of a house wherein last year four members of the family were attacked with typhoid fever, one narrowly escaping death. The house was well situated, standing by itself in a most salubrious situation. The most thorough examination disclosed no defect in its drainage or water supply, nor was there any typhoid fever in the neighborhood. It was found, however, that an offensive odor emanated from a partially uncovered cess-pool in an adjoining garden connected with prem-ises which had been occupied for school purposes. Circumstances were such as to admit of no reasonable question but that the germs of the fever had arisen from this cess-pool. Dr. Carpenter concludes that while the breeding ground of ordinary malarious germs is n the earth alone, and the germs of some other diseases may be in the water alone, that there is an intermediate class producing cholera, typhoid fever, yellow fever and perhaps some other forms of fever which may thrive in the human body, or in the earth, or in water having the necessary impurities to invite their visitation and fructification.

These disclosures made from time to time by scientific men who are giving much time to sanitary science naturally lead one to inquire how long the privy vaults of farm houses and those sometimes in closely packed villages may go without attention and at the same time without filling the neighborhood with the germs of dis ease. Where the soil is leachy and there is a quick absorption of the impurities of the excrementitious matter there may, perhaps, be no danger whatever arising from neglected privy vaults. But where the soil is hard and clay-like, or where it is rocky, or where, as in some cases the vaults are made water-tight by cement of some kind, it seems evident that there should be a frequent clearing out of such places or else the substitution of some such invention as the earth closet. It is a question in our mind whether the earth closet is not the proper thing to earth closet is not the proper thing to be used where it is impossible to have connection with public sewers, as in large cities. By the use of the earth closet the discharges are at once covered and at once intermingled with a dry absorptive earth which practically disinfects at once. This earth can be removed as often as necessary and new dry earth substituted. That which is borne away is perhaps as valuable for compost purposes as many of those compounds which are furnished for this purpose, shipped great dis-tances and carried by vehicles to the garden or farm. Would it not, then, be well for those who are fully abreast with sanitary progress to look into this matter and see if some of the many earth closets now made may not furnish a way out of what seems like a troublesome difficulty?

The agent of a New York grocery house happened into a small establishment in a village in New Hampshire you come to invest so much in codfish?" "Well, I kinder figgured for a corner, you see." "How?" "Why, I bought up every pound of it in town, and the roads are so bad that no more can be got in here for a month." "And how have you succeeded?" "Busted all to smash," was the sorrowful reply. "Just as I got the corner fixed, the only three families in town, who eat only three families in town, who eat codfish went off to Florida to spend the minton !!! winter!"
