OUR EXPOSITION LETTER.

No men should derive greater benefit from personal study of this exhibition, than the agricultural class. Probably as much as two-thirds of the machinery exhibit including implements, are directly devoted to the various operations of the farm, saying nothing of the many useful helps for the house-keeper and her work. There are great blocks of space occupied wholly with plows, cultivators, planters, reapers, threshers and farm mills, shellers, grinders and feed preparators, all more or less useful in the multifarious labors of the farm. There is a recently patented potato planter, which takes the entire tuber, cuts it into suitable sizes and plants eight acres per day, dropping and covering the seeds, without any other aid than a horse and his driver, and its inventor claims that it will more than repay its cost in one season's saving of time and labor, and of corn and wheat machinery there is so much and such variety as would seem to almost make the labor of the husband-man a luxury instead of drudgery.

In the patent office exhibit, taken in comparison with the more modern devices exhibited outside, one can see the wonderful strides that have been made, not only in the improved farm, but in all other classes of machinery. There is seen the original model of the reaping machine, quaint and odd in construction and appearance, but which revolutionized wheat culture, and without which it would seem impossible now to supply the world with bread. Here also the cotton planter may see the model of the original cotton gin, which led to the development of this great industry, and is believed by some people, curious in such speculations, to have exercised no little influence in shaping political and social questions, affecting the country. This original gin was patented by Eli Whitney, March 14th, 1794, nearly a century ago, and was the invention of his leisure hours while engaged as school-teacher in the South. Compared with the many improvements now exhibited in gins of the present day, it is much in the category as the old wooden mould board of antiquity. But, if there would have been no Whitney, there would be no Pratt, with his rapid manipulator, as without a Robert Fulton with his slow, awkward boat, there would have been no palace steamers, plowing river, lake and ocean. How little do the busy rushing through think of their obligations to the patient, anxious pioneers of art and invention! It is of interest to note here, that a fire destroyed the patent office Dec. 26th, 1836, when 7,000 models were burned, another similar disaster Sep. 24th, 1878, destroyed 87,000 models on which letters had been granted and 27,000 models of applications pending. The total of models lost foots up to 121,000, and there are now in the office 148,500 models, occupying a space of 63,508 superficial feet, a striking evidence of the activity of the American brain.

Two large excursion parties from Boston, have at different times been here. They left the Hub and proceeded straight to St. Louis, where they chartered one of the Anchor Line's magnificent boats, came down the father of waters to New Orleans, stayed one week and lived on their boat. Few people appreciate the fact that such a magnificent line of steamers as the Anchor Line now ply on the muddy Mississippi.

The states are vying with each other not only in the extent and magnificence of exhibit, but otherwise attracting public attention to their respective merits. Hon. Robt. W. Furnas, of Nebraska, commissioner for his state, not satisfied with making one of the greatest exhibits on the grounds, has called to his aid the art preservative, and in a handsome little book portrays the vast resources, advantages and promises of that great commonwealth. From his little book we learn that since its first settlement in 1855, the increase in population, as compared with neighboring states is in the ratio of 310 per cent.; she has a school fund valued at $50,000,000; she has nearly 3,000 miles of railroad lines and nearly 5,000 miles of telegraph; she raised in 1884, of corn 169,000,000, and of wheat 48,000,000 bushels; and her live stock are valued at over $78,000,000, and thousands of intelligent and enterprising people are flocking to and finding rich and cheap homes among a genial and progressive people, with all the social advantages of our older communities.

It would not be fair to omit some mention, in this connection of the ex-
