OUR EXPOSITION LETTER.

Among the impressive paintings in the Art Gallery—"Waiting for Mon-tezuma" by Tavsemier. It derives its interest from the pathetic tradition of the simple Aztec people, who are here represented as looking forward to the coming of him who was to be their Messiah, a dream rudely broken and dispelled by the conquering and mercenary Spaniard. It is somewhat remarkable that artists in all ages have drawn their most interesting subjects from the religious traditions of the people, and as in the "Last Supper," the work before us illustrates one of the most affecting incidents or traditions of the people who, until disturbed by the incursions of a "more religious race," are believed to have lived in the devoted practice of the best principles of all religions, observing the golden rule, and ever repaying the vindictive and monstrous cruelties of the bigoted and blood-thirsty invaders with offices of kindness and mercy. At least this picture impresses the spectator with such an estimate of the character of the Aztecs.

Far different in scene and sentiment is Mignot's "Niagara," the large canvas painting of an American wonder by an American artist. Here power, majesty and beauty are blended; mountains of seething waters, whose irresistible plunge over the lofty ledge to the awful depth below, startle the beholder, reassured and composed when he sees the foaming billows changing into gentle waves, flowing peacefully away, crowned and encircled by a thousand different rainbow hues. Louis Remy Mignot, the artist, although an American, spent most of his life abroad, and died in London fifteen years ago, leaving this immortal image of the eternal Niagara as a rich legacy to his countrymen and the world. In the contemplation of what is really beautiful and instructive here, the regret that the whole people are unable to see and study them, is always uppermost in the cor-respondent's mind; about as profitable an investment as the government could have made would have been an appropriation to have leased the railroads three months to carry every one to the Exposition free of charge, for after bread and butter are secured of what value is money as compared with knowledge and mental cultivation? But let us stop moralizing and go over to the states.

"By their fruits we shall know them," is, I believe, the way it reads in the Bible, and it is thus that the several states make themselves known in this Exposition. In this way, our most southern state, Florida, is proclaiming to the world her matchless character and advantages. There is but one Florida, and the Orange is her Queen, with a most attractive coterie of attendants—the fig, lemon, pine-apple, grape, fruit, lime, etc., while every vegetable, berry, and vine known to the world, flourish in her genial soil and climate, not to mention sugar-cane, cotton and many other crops. Thousands of northern people have founded pleasant winter residences in "The Italy of America," and it is a rare thing to hear of anyone who is dissatisfied with his investment. A newspaper paragraph recently noticed the fact that Rev.
Charles Beecher, of Elmira, N. Y., had been down there recently, gathering his orange crop, while his sister, also, Mrs. Stowe, spends her winters gathering and enjoying the fruits of her fine plantation in the same state, together with hundreds of others from the eastern and other northern states.

The influx of people seeking homes in Florida is very large, her cheap lands, rare productions and mild climate, having charms which few people can resist, after a brief, acquaintance with them. To the man of limited means wishing to make a certain investment, no states offer greater opportunities than the peninsula. While the climate is such as to make living comparatively cheap and easy, the nature of her products is such that the demand constantly keeps pace with the increased supply, and so long as a first-class orange sells for five cents, there is no danger of a glut in the market; even a really good apple, after centuries of cultivation, cannot be bought in New Orleans to-day, for less, while the best oranges on sale here, also bring 60 cents per dozen.
Besides, such is the constantly increasing demand for winter residences and orange groves in Florida, that so soon as one is established in any fairly good locality, it can be readily disposed of at usually double its cost. The growing of figs, lemons, pine-apples, berries and early vegetables, is likewise very profitable, as the state's exhibit here shows; grain and grasses of all (CONCLUDED ON EIGHTH PAGE)
