They seem to be having an epidemic of indisposition across in Decatur county, Kansas. The report made to the Probate Judge of that county, last month, contained the names of sixteen hundred sick men. In order to stop the further advance of the dread epidemic, large shipments of beer, nicely concealed in flour barrels, are being hurried into bleeding Kansas, satrapy of Decatur. Three wagon loads of "flour barrels" started Kansas-ward, from this city, Monday evening. The boys get thirsty in our neighboring county, and must needs have their whistles moistened, and verily the innocent "flour barrel" dodge is smooth.

As we slowly gain particulars, it appears that the hail and wind storm of Sunday evening was unusually severe. The hail was the size of hen's eggs, which, driven by a stiff breeze, made it distressingly uncomfortable for man and beast for a few minutes during the continuance of the storm. H. H. Berry was caught in the storm when within a half mile of his homestead south of town, and from the bruises and gashes on head and body, one would imagine he had stood up before John L. for three or four rounds. The narrow scope of country south of the river where the storm raged, suffered considerable in crops, but fortunately the strip was very narrow.

A man, evidently deranged, jumped from passenger train No. 1, Friday morning, between Corona and Ft. Morgan, while the train was making 35 miles an hour. The man was uninjured, and started to run over the prairie, removing his shoes after proceeding a short distance. A large number of people from both the above towns spent the following day in searching for the poor fellow. He was finally found in an irrigating ditch, his mouth, nose and eyes alone being out of the water, and his entire body had the appearance of the skin on a washer-woman's hands, after a long day's washing. His feet were swelled to nearly twice their usual size, the effect of running over cactus beds, which abound in that locality, and altogether he was in a most wretched and deplorable condition. Before jumping from the train, he handed the porter in the Pullman car over $200 to keep for him, as he said he was afraid "some one would do him up." He was kindly cared for.

The Congregational Church was redolent with the perfume of flowers, and bright and cheery with the sweet song of birds, Sunday, on the occasion of the celebration of Children's Day, which was generally observed on that day throughout the union. A number of those interested in the Sunday School work were busy all day Saturday decorating the interior of the church in a becoming manner, which they were enabled to do, through the kindness of friends who generously offered their services, flowers, birds, paintings, etc., to assist in making the audience room as pleasant and inviting as possible. And all who had the pleasure of being present and seeing the tasty arrangement made of paintings and flowers, evergreen arches and trimmings, and of listening to the music, recitations, responsive readings, etc., of the children, were highly entertained and pleased. The exercises were withal creditable and encouraging to those having the same in charge, who are to be congratulated upon the smoothness which characterized the day's doings.

At a meeting held on Monday evening, it was ascertained that over $540 of the money subscribed for the Fourth of July Celebration had already been collected. The matter of location then occupied the attention of those present. After a spirited discussion, a vote on question was taken, which resulted in eight for and seven against holding the celebration at the Driving Association grounds. The committee on location, after some consultation, reported that they had decided to have the speaking and fireworks in town, and the racing, and the different amusements at the Association's grounds. Dr. Kay resigning, C. T. Brewer was appointed Marshal of the Day, with A. M. Kelly, Sam Ashmore, D. J. Smith and J. R. Phelan as assistants. Although the Driving Association's grounds are quite a distance from town, as the races will in all probability be the most absorbing amusement of the day, the selection for that part of the celebration not embraced in the speaking and fireworks, is the best that could have been made.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Midnight Hunt on the Willow.

Some hungry fellows started out, last night, for a hunt on the Willow. Just as one of them was about to bag his game—pluck a fowl from her midnight perch—he was astonished to find himself bagged by the night watch. Three brave fellows hurried him to the house, while the other gave No. 2 chase over the hills. But nought but a blue streak was visible, where a piece of his coat tail was found, this morning, and pursuit was abandoned, and the pursuer returned to scene the first. A bag of feathers and a pile of molasses soon appeared. The young fellow begged and moaned piteously, but his capturers relented not, and the "young chick" was seasoned in elegant shape. Instead of devouring the "chick," as he expected, a beautiful plumage was added to the otherwise featherless gossin, whose squawking qualities were then thoroughly tested, and the thoughts that bound his wings and legs were cut and the young fellow arose, and drawing his tattered garments about him, remarked, "I am a pretty bird," which was assented to by his capturers, provided his feathers were not so badly ruffled.

After making every promise from stealing to refrain, Was glad to go; Without a who-a, Never to return again.

His hat was placed upon his head, with many a kindly joke, Which to remove again, He tried in vain, Then put his head to soak.

Now, Ed, H., when you hungry get, Just call on us again, For we have molasses plenty yet, Which is as free as rain.
