MA, wasn't Job an editor? Why, my son? Because he has so much affliction.

ORDINARY people regard a man of a certain force and inflexibility of character as they do a lion. They look at him with a sort of wonder—perhaps they admire him; but they will on no account house with him. The lap-dog, who wags his tail and licks the hand, cringes at the nod of every stranger, is a much more acceptable companion to them.—Merkle.

NEARLY forty young and middle aged men in the city who have heretofore been taking a drink more or less frequently, have formed an organization and pledged themselves that they will not drink any intoxicating liquors during the next year. They have put up $100 each, which is to be forfeited to the association in case the signer breaks his pledge. The list of signers would astonish some people if it were published.—Lincoln News.

MR. SPARKS' latest peculiar decision in the land grant business is to the effect that a road that has never been built and never will be built is entitled to the lands set aside for its "indemnity" in the original granting act—that is, entitled enough to prevent a road that has been built from getting lands that it has earned. The road that is not built is entitled to lands—the road that is built is not. Mr. Sparks has a great head.—Topics.

A SCHOOL director in Illinois is in trouble because he took his shotgun and started in to kill all the boys in the district. In fact he is in jail. But it is to be hoped the case will be exhaustively gone into before he is punished. There is a wonderfully strong possibility that he was fully justified in going upon the warpath. There are few men who have gone through life without feeling an insane desire to take a shotgun or a circular saw and apply it to a gang of boys.—Journal Topics.

EDITING a paper without a friendly exchange to suggest ideas and furnish news too cumbersome in detail for the wires, is a dull business. For three days the only resource of the Journal force has been such papers as had not gone the course of all exchanges and the field of imagination. The latter source of inspiration has never been cultivated to any great extent in these precincts consecrated to fact, and the result is a dearth of the usual attractive collection of newsy and interesting matter. But this condition is doubtless over and is not likely to occur again this winter.—Topics.

ONE of the questions that will soon come up before the Kentucky Legislature is that which is now receiving such widespread attention in the south—prohibition. Twenty-eight counties in the state have already declared in favor of local option and at least are living under a temperance lay in theory. The method of declaration was that employed in Georgia, where single communities voted upon the subject at separate times and in a quiet way. It is not likely that the state of Kentucky, the head and front of the whiskey distilling interests, will profit much by the experience of Georgia, but it is morally certain that only the most judicious liquor policy can prevent the spread of the local option laws there. The violence of any revolution is always in proportion to the evils which it seeks to correct, and there is probably no other state in the Union which the whiskey men have dominated with a ruder hand than Kentucky. These facts the Kentucky Legislature should consider. The temper of the people, while not favorable to the entire abolition of the liquor traffic, is in favor of the strictest license laws possible. To defer the passage of these is only to invite more radical measures, which even whiskey rings may be powerless to either dodge or repeal.

For several years Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has been prized for its speedy and certain cures of croup. It is the favorite and main reliance with thousands of mothers. It will not only cure croup but if freely used as soon as the first indication of the disease appears, that is as soon as the child becomes the least hoarse, it will prevent it, doing away with all danger and anxiety. There is not the least danger in giving the remedy freely, as it contains no injurious substance. Sold by M. A. Spalding and Willey & Walker.
