His Recollections of Early Days in the Office of a Weekly Paper. Response to a Toast at a Ben Franklin Banquet.

"All things change in the procession of years, and it may be that I am among strangers. It may be that the printer of to-day is not the printer of thirty-five years ago. I was no stranger to him. I knew him well. I built his fire for him in the winter mornings; I brought his water from the village pump; I swept out his office; I picked up his type from the broken ones among the 'hell matter;' rolled, I washed the rollers, I washed the forms, I folded the papers, I carried them around at dawn Thursday mornfor the mail-we had 100 town subscribers and 350 country ones; the town subscribers paid in groceries and the country ones in cabbage and cordwood -when they paid at all, which was only sometimes, and then we always stated the fact in the paper and gave them a puff; and if we forgot it they stopped the ones. I was brought so low by neglecting Every man on the town list helped edit the thing; that is, he gave orders as to bow it was to be edited: dictated its opinions, marked out its had one subscriber who paid cash, and our polities every which way, and he made us change our religion four times paper, and, of course, that meant bankruptcy and destruction. That man used to write articles a column and a half long, leaded long primer, and sign them 'Junius' or 'Veritas' or 'Vox Populi,' some other high-sounding rot; and then, after it was up, he would come in and say he had changed his mind-which was a gilded figure of speech, because out: We couldn't stand such a waste that office; so we always took the leads out, altered the signature, credited the then to make up for short matter we would 'turn over adds-turn over the caused by Bright's disease." whole page and duplicate it.
