

THE CAPITOL GUIDES.

Those Who Show the Visitors Through the Great Halls of Congress.

The guides at the capitol, says The Washington Hatchet, are reaping a golden harvest from the bridal boom that is now in full bloom.

The guides say the bridal parties are their best customers, and frequently drop a crisp $5 note into their hands after being shown the sights.

Speaking of the guides they are a polite set of fellows, and make their money by hard work. Some days they strike it rich, but other days they do not take in enough to pay for bread and butter.

These are the dark spots in their tread-mill lives. Some people have an idea that these men are furnished by the government pro bono publico because they wear a little medal badge bearing the legend "Capitol Guide," and kick at the mention of a fee.

Formerly there were only six guides, but the number has been doubled, lacking one, by the pressure for places. After all they have not as fat places as one might imagine. Their receipts will run from $50 to $75 a month.

Then the distinguished men in both houses of congress must be pointed out and their peculiarities narrated. The guides say that Gibson, of Maryland, and Toole, the delegate from Montana, are considered the handsomest men in the house of representatives by a majority of visitors.

The guides have queer experiences with all sorts of people. On one occasion three well dressed, cosmopolitan-looking New Yorkers took a guide for three hours. At the close of their rounds each man went deep down into his pocket, and fishing up a nickel, handed it to the amazed cicerone in the most matter-of-fact way, and without a trace of fun in their faces.

The guides have queer experiences with all sorts of people. On one occasion three well dressed, cosmopolitan-looking New Yorkers took a guide for three hours. At the close of their rounds each man went deep down into his pocket, and fishing up a nickel, handed it to the amazed cicerone in the most matter-of-fact way, and without a trace of fun in their faces.

The trio readily accepted the invitation, and followed their friend to the restaurant. When they got through with 50 cents' worth of refreshments each of the three handed over a dollar, and the laugh came in.

An Irishman came in one day and was escorted to the "echo block" in statutory hall. He said it was wonderful, but they had one at the lakes of Killarney that could beat it. "Why," said he, "when you say 'How do you do?' over that stone in the old country it answers 'Pretty well, I thank you.'" That finished the guide up in one round. One man wanted to know who was president before Washington.

The guides show about ten thousand persons through annually. They lose a great deal of money by visitors having acquaintances and relatives in the capitol, who are brought into service. Members of congress often employ the guides to take their constituency over the tracks, as they have not the time, and cheerfully pay rather than be troubled with the tiresome task.

The guides are appointed by the sergeant-at-arms of congress and the architect of the capitol, and in the same manner as the orpilot police.

A Utica, N. Y., genius has invented a farm harness that weighs less than fifteen pounds, and does away with whiffletree traces, and many of the cumbersome straps and buckles.

A Yankee and a Squatter.

A religious-looking traveler stopped near the roadside and began to talk to an Arkansas man who was engaged in building a sort of house.

"What are you doing my friend?" "Buildin' a church."

"You are not building it alone, are you?" "I mean, are you the only man engaged in the good work?"

"An' I axed you of you seed anybody else?" "Oh, pshaw! man—"

"That's what I say." "Have you done all this work?" "No, every man in the neighborhood takes a turn at it."

"Aren't you afraid that pole will fall up there?" "No, it won't fall up thar. Ef it falls, it'll fall down here. Never seed nothin' fall up."

"What will this church be when it's done?" "It'll be finished."

"Of course. I mean what sort of a church?" "Log."

"You certainly understand me. What denomination?" "Methodist, Baptist and Democrat."

"You seem to mix religion with your politics." "No, we mix politics with our religion."

"You are doing pretty good work, but it does seem to me that the pole is going to fall."

"Reckon not." "Your judgment may be better than mine, but I think the pole is insecure. Have you any school houses in this community?"

"No, I haven't." "I mean are there any school houses here?" "Yes, thar's one, but old Nat Levier whipped the teacher, turned him out an' hung up his terbacker in the house."

"Well, I declare." "So do I." "Say?" "Wall."

"You'd better fix that pole." "I ain't got nothin' to do with it." "It's going to fall, or your judgment is better than mine."

"Whar you from?" "Massachusetts." "An' thought you'd come down to civilization, eh?"

"No thought I'd come down and teach you fellows something. Why didn't you turn the other side of that log out?"

"Because we turned it in." "Well, I want to know why you make the roof so flat?"

"So the chillun can climb up on it an' go to sleep durin' preachin'." "Well I declare."

"That's what I say." "Say?" "Wall."

"I ain't satisfied about that pole. It—"

Just at that instant the pole fell and cracked the Yankee on the head. When he got up—while his face was lighted by a mirthless and painful grin, the squatter said:

"Shake, podner, your judgment was better'n mine."—Arkansas Traveler.

An Overworked Pastor. A man arrived in a Dakota town on the Missouri river in an early day and soon found an old friend who had come out as a Methodist minister.

"Do you find the labors hard?" he asked of the reverend gentleman.

"Yes, quite so." "You look over-worked."

"I am." "I suppose in a new country where churches are very scattering you find it much harder to keep up the work?"

"Y-e-e-s, I suppose I do." "You certainly try to do too much. You should not over-work yourself this way. Why don't you apply for another man on your charge?"

"Well, you see the church work isn't so heavy after all and I suppose that could hardly be said to be wearing me out. The fact is the boys noticed I had some leisure time and they put me in chairman of the vigilance committee. Times are flush now and it keeps me jumping around pretty lively. You'll just excuse me a few minutes as I have an appointment now to look after one of my flock who has rather gone astray in the matter of horses."—Estelme Bell.

The War feature of the August Century will be "Fredericksburg," described by General James Longstreet, and by General Darius D. Couch and General William Farrar Smith, the latter of whom were Union corps commanders in the battle. A short paper by Major J. Horace Lacy of Virginia, owner of the historic "Lacy House" opposite Fredericksburg, printed in the same number, describes "Lee at Fredericksburg." It contains the following paragraph: "I am the more moved to send you these reminiscences, as in the providence of God your magazine occupies the foremost place as the great pacificator between the North and the South, holding the even scale of equal and exact justice, and pouring light on every act and incident of the great Civil War. You have not raked amid the deceitful ashes of the past, to bring together upon the altar of sectional hate the live coals of that fire which once burned all too fiercely, but ever by kind, fair, and impartial utterances, giving both sides an equal show, you have poured oil upon the troubled waters and deserve that benediction which rests upon the peacemaker."

MR GLADSTONE'S VOICE.

The Remarkable Effect It Has Upon His Auditors.

In its account of the debate upon the homerule bill The Pall Mall Gazette says: At last Mr. Gladstone rose, and nobody who has not been in the house on a great occasion can know exactly what even old spectators feel when a different atmosphere seems to pervade the house, something like the effect caused by the raising of the curtain before a transformation scene. All is there as it was, but different. At midnight the members' lobby was crowded with eager and anxious groups, but the two words, "Gladstone's," caused them to stampede into the house like a flock of sheep before a watchdog—not to go in leisurely, and with dignity, but literally to turn and run helter-skelter, all alike, old parliamentary hands and young Mr. P.'s to whom they were so much indebted.

The prime minister was pale—almost as white as the flower in his buttonhole—and there was an added solemnity in his manner befitting the occasion. Best of all, however, was his clear and ringing voice. It rang as clear as years gone by, and what a voice it is! To begin with, it is of extraordinary compass, from the light high bantering note in which he speaks, to the deep, resonant, intentionally hoarse bass to which it sank as he spoke of the "profound and bitter condemnation" with which English action toward Ireland was universally received. Then the flexibility of it, from top note to bottom Mr. Gladstone passes as lightly and smoothly and easily as a bird's carol. But the quality of it—how one can describe that! It is impossible to do so without seeming to fall into absurd hyperbole. There is something so winning, so "magnetic," in Mr. Gladstone's voice, as it was once more, and as we can hardly venture to hope that as he grows older it will be necessary to seek for a simile. A cathedral bell sounding far away over a river, a waterfall heard a long way off in the stillness of night, a sea rolling slowly in over a pebbly beach, a summer wind blowing over a hilltop of pine—in each of these there is a strange, indescribable quality which sometimes makes one's eyes fill and one's throat contract for mere physical sympathy, and in Mr. Gladstone's voice, when he will, there is the same note. The admirable construction of his speech, how it began by a few personalities and references to his immediate predecessors in debate, how it passed carefully to other matters, how it culminated in a denunciation of the rival policy, how there came into it the touch of national poetry, and the picture of Erin with the cup at her lips—picture finished with a touch of Virgil—how it concluded with a solemn appeal for a "blessed oblivion of the past," and "happiness, prosperity, and peace" for the years that are to come—these, and other absence of any personal taint, any compromise of certainty, any egotism, any egotism, all can see who will read it. But that voice—is only an inalienable memory.

The Pope's Interest in America. Leo XIII. feels an extraordinary interest in all that relates to the United States, writes a Rome correspondent of The New York Sun. This was shown in his careful elaboration of the scheme or programme of matters to be discussed and settled in the plenary council of Baltimore in November, 1884. Every item had been carefully weighed by him at Rome, in consultation with the American archbishops in the preceding autumn. He gave them a full-length portrait of himself to be placed in the hall where they were to deliberate, so that they might, in a manner, preside in person over their every proceeding. Indeed, the council, with its acts and decrees, were to the venerable pontiff a subject of especial delight and personal care. This was in a very particular manner the case with the creation of the university of Washington, which was to be a nursery of priestly virtue and solid learning.
