THE President finds that "pernicious activity" of rheumatic gout means inactivity on the part of the afflicted.

CLEVELAND's plurality in New York in 1882 was 192,854 votes. In 1884 it was just 1,047. What will it be in '88?

A CHICAGO clergyman asks: "Can a man be a Christian and at the same time a successful business man?" And Puck says he can if he advertises largely.

ENGLAND proposes to celebrate this year the fiftieth anniversary of "Victoria's happy and glorious reign." Among other things it is proposed to erect a jubilee tower 440 feet in height.

THESE words were not spoken in this year of grace, as the reasonable supposition might be, but 500 before the Christian Era by Confucius, the Chinese ethical philosopher:

"Of all people, girls and servants are the most difficult to behave to. If you are familiar with them, they lose their humility; if you maintain a reserve towards them, they are discontented."

"It is a great mistake to suppose that the enjoyment of religion is the antithesis of the enjoyment of nature of terrestrial things. It is equally absurd to imagine that a sinner can extract more pleasure from legitimate worldly sources than a saint. The truth is, religion and nature are counterparts and complements of each other and other things being equal, the Christian occupies a peerless vantage ground over the irreligious. Why not? His comprehension sweeps round a wider horizon, his ken penetrates into profounder depths, his capacities measure up to sublimer and more abundant felicities. To him there is honey in every flower and nectar in every spring. In every spire of grass, and leaflet and dew-drop, as well as in every blazing star and sparkling intellect, he sees the handwriting of benevolent design."

AN exchange soliloquizes thusly: In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, and then set all things up in housekeeping thereon. Then he created man and woman, but where did the loafer come in? You have all seen him. He is always present at the post-office, the store, the depot, or in some one's office. There he sits cross-legged, looking wise and making plain all the deep problems that have vexed the mightiest minds. Nothing is too deep for his intellect to unravel. And he samples all the sugar at the stores, borrows and reads all the papers wherever he stops, gets in the way at the shop, and in all ways makes himself conspicuous, except by his absence. While he is thus engaged his family are left to take care of themselves and do the best they can. And yet we suppose after the loafers read this, they will still continue to loaf.

ONE may hear all sorts of rumors regarding the railroad designs, plans, purposes and accomplishments. It is said that the Burlington & Missouri elected Harlan. The speaker would not have been elected without Lancaster county, which went over to him piece-meal—and Lancaster is probably as subservient to Burlington & Missouri as any county in the state is to any railroad. You have the syllogism. Lancaster went to Harlan; Lancaster is controlled by the Burlington & Missouri. Therefore the Burlington & Missouri went to Harlan. Pursue the logic a trifle further. Harlan represents Van Wyck, the Burlington & Missouri went to Harlan. Therefore the Burlington & Missouri is really for Van Wyck. If there is a combination between the senator and the railroads, it probably will never be absolutely known. But if there were such a thing, what would be the outward indications? Would the railroad attorneys consult Van Wyck openly and labor for him so? I fancy not. Would they make a feint of fighting him? Perhaps. How would they fight him? Just as they are fighting him to-day—powerlessly, impotently, wearily, in the chaotic, crazy and no account fashion. Benedict Arnold did not say to his American commanding officer: "Hear ye! I go to offer my services to the enemy!" He stole out under cover, clothing himself with the pretense of loyalty, that he might be in favor of Van Wyck, he will be elected. If the opposition to Van Wyck is no better managed than it has been so far, he will be elected. The greatest danger to his cause is in the intimacy which exists between his friends and those of Weaver, and, it is rumored, between Weaver and himself. We had a taste of that sort of thing six years ago. Senator Paddock was then a candidate for re-election, but many of his supporters were friendly with Nance—were really waiting for a chance to desert Paddock and vote for Nance. Naturally Nance, who was then governor, was friendly to Paddock, who had done considerable political service for him, but he could not resist the temptation to take advantage of his own popularity. The result was natural and inevitable. Paddock accused Nance of treachery. Nance retorted in kind, immediate followers of each swore that the other should not make it, and in the midst and because of this confusion, Van Wyck was born. It would be strange if history should repeat itself and visit upon Van Wyck the fate that Paddock suffered six years ago. As Nance was to Paddock then, so in a great degree is Weaver to Van Wyck to-day. Weaver desires to be the heir to Van Wyck and must be friendly with him; moreover, many of Van Wyck's followers look toward Weaver for a second choice. And yet Weaver must not permit Van Wyck's election. To win gratitude without deserving it—to fall heir to an estate to which he is not entitled—that is Weaver's difficult task. But if any man in Nebraska can manage such an affair, it is the wily congressman from Richardson.—Fred Nye to the Omaha World.
