How a Colored Boy Became Rich, and the Effect His Wealth Has Had Upon Him-One Dollar in The Louisians

State Lottery. Of course a majority of our citizens are opposed to gambling, but there is considerable pleasure when you try it to know that you are going to play a game that is fair. Clifford J. Tweedy, the colored boy who was the lucky holder of the one-tenth of ticket 23, 899-the second capital prize of $50,-000-received about a week ago his one-tenth, or $5,000, and our readers of this colored boy's life, and how he won the prize, and what he has done and intends doing with his money.

Clifford is a likely colored boy, about twenty-one or twenty-two years of age and was raised by Mr. Henry T. Peay, with whom he has been for the past sixteen years. At the time of his drawing the $5,000 he was in the employ of Mr. Peay, getting $8 per month. He has retained his position with Mr. Peay, and does his work as faithfully as ever.

After receiving his $5,000 he deposted $4,000 in the Georgia Railroad | Bank and took one thousand dollars and divided a portion of it amongst his poor colored relations. Be it to his credit too, he did not forget his employer, Mr. Peay, to whom he gave a present of fifty dollars.

He says with the four thousand dollars that he has deposited in the Georgia Railroad he intends to buy Augusta real estate, another sign that he has a level head. In answer to the question how much he had invested before winning, he replied that he had bought a ticket regularly every month for the last fifteen months, and it was the fifteeenth dollar that did the work.-Augusta (Ga.) A PERSEVERING SCIENTIST.

A Series of Careful and Successful Experiments Extending Over a Period of Ten Years. Royal Microscopic society, recently delivered an address in which he described a series of experiments which he had conducted for nearly ten patient and faithful years. H s project was to place and keep under h s lens several varieties of those minute monads which are incessantly multiplying by fissure or diwould perhaps like to know something vision, and which are nearly at the bottom of animated nature.

The generation of these creatures minutes; so that in the course of an hour he can view the passage of fourteen or fifteen generations, which would answer to semething like 450 years of huexistence would represent more than 10,000 of our years. These monads live in water. And by connecting the paratus the temperature of this drop can be either kept constant or raised very slowly and with absolutely steady precision. To carry out so very delicate an investigation, however, it would have to be prolonged for months, and even years, in order to imitate the immense deliberation with which nature herself accomplishes every substantial change in her highest productions. Night and day, winter and summer, the patient gaze must be kept fixed on those merest specks of silvery life, which had to be nursed into new conditions of existence. The slightest accident to the apparatus might in one moment render the whole experiment yold, and leave the drop of water as lifeless as these islands would be if another glacical period suddenly arrived.

The only reward, on the other hand, for successful and almost inconceivable win's generalization. But, for the sake of these, which always satisfy the noble ardor of science, Dr. Dallinger has given as many years of his life as was spent has apparently won a scentific victory the value of which is as signal as his ingenuity and devotion are adm rable.

We will endeavor very briefly to describe the method and the outcome of his most remarkable experiments. The groud of m croscop c monads were put under the lens in a well-fitted watercell at their usual temperature of 60 degrees Fahrenheit, the apartment, the apparatus, and all around being carefully kept in precise unison. The doctor then spent the first four months of his observation time after time by stages less than one sixth of a degree until his new swarm of protozoa had reached the new and advanced reading of 70 degrees Fahrenheit.

The change, nevertheless, had no more disturbed them than that Experilife history of each group remaining unaltered; they moved, gyrated, fed, and split themselves into new individuals in just the same manner and within much the same periods as before. When, however, three more degrees had been added to the 70, the monads showed signs of being decidedly inconvenienced. They were neither as lively nor as proproductive as formerly; yet, by keeping them exactly at this range during two quiet months, they regained their former vigor, and might be compared to emigrants who had become seasoned by surviving the first hot spell in a tropical country. They could now standby gradual steps of increase-the enhanced heat of 78 degrees, which was reached at the commencement of the twelfth month.

Yet here, again, a long pause was found to be necessary; the new generations of those silver specks of life under the glass were not all alike strong enough to live and thrave. What answers to sunstroke and fever with us had caused vacant spaces to appear in the water-drop, and it was only when the monads showed themselves once more lively and prolific by a long era of repose that the careful doctor administered a further dose of caloric.

During eight years and a half did he thus slowly and unweariedly proceed in the same course, augmenting the heat of their surrounding element now and then by slow and slight additions, pausing afterward for months to give the minute creatures time to accommodate themselves when signs were visible that they were under difficulties, and always going forward to new trials of endurance when they had recovered. In this manner, after all those years. Dr. Dallinger brought his small patients to the astonishing range of 157 degrees Fahrenheit, at which the latest generation appeared "as jolly as sand boys."

It is not possible to say how much farther their tiny constitutions could have been trained to defy increasing warmth, because the research was at this point accidently terminated; but it will be seen that the doctor had brought the little people of his dropworld to sustain a heat nearly 100 degrees h gher than the flourishing point of their ancestors, and species of which, if taken at the beginning, would have been completely and instantaneously killed in water of 140 degrees.

When we have added that these minute salamanders perished directly they were put back into their ancestral medium of 65 degrees it will be man:fest that the indefatigable doctor had by the magic of science, effected a miracle of nature. - London Telegraph.

Fate of a Cow That Ate Soap.

Mention was made in this paper a short time since about a cow in Montgomery county eating several bars of soap, and also the fact that the cow died and that the owner of the animal had sued for dam-Rev. Dr. Dallinger, president of the ages. Rev. E. W. Lawburn, of New Rich. mond, while on his way to an appointment at Jamestown, purchased some soap and placed it in a sleigh owned by George Deibi, who was to deliver the soap at the minis ter's house. Afterward Deihl met a man named Howard Dewey; they exchanged borses, and Deihl went home in Dewey' buggy, while Dewey went to see a girl at the residence of George Saxe, with the soup under the seat, not knowing it was in the sleigh. The cow of Saxe ate the soap and died, of course. An examination was held and the soap found in the cow's stomach. Mr. Eaxe has sued all three of the above succeed each other about every four persons, so as to be sure of getting damages from somebody. The cow belonged to Saxe, the soap to Lawburn, the sleigh con-taining the soap to Deihl, the horse hitched to the sleigh to Dewey, and Dewey was the person who went to see the girl of the man man history, while a day of monadic whose cow ate the soap. If the man had included the young lady whom Dewey went to see as a party to the suit, then it might be easier to tell who damages could be relive in water. Where is Heaven?

This singular question was put to Sam Jones, the evangelist, by one of his wealthy church members in Georgia, whose cotten crop yielded him some twenty thousand iollars last year. "Where is heaven?" said the rich planter.

"I'll tell you where heaven is," said Mr. Jones. "If you go down to the village and buy fifty dollars worth of groceries, put them in a wagon and take them to the poor widow on the hillside, who has three of her children sick. She is poor and a member of the church. Take with you a nurse and someone to cook their meals. When you get there rend the twenty-third psalm, and kneel by her side and pray. Then you will find out what heaven is. Next day as the evagenlist was walking through the village, he met the same wealthy planter, his face beaming with joy. He spoke after this manner: "Mr. Jones, I've found out where heaven is. I went and did as you directed me. We took up perseverance would be the discovery of the wagon load of groceries, and the widow truth and the re-enforcement of Dar- expressed her thankfulness. As I read her the twenty-third psalm my heart was . lled with thankfulness to God, and when I orayed the angels came down and I thought was nearer heaven than I had ever been before in my life. How to Preserve the Hair.

A good supply of oxygen is necessary for he healthy growto of hair; the head should be well aired. The hat has made sad havoc with many a caput. Endeavor to go bareneaded as often as possible. When walking ift the hat from off the head frequently, and, if the sun is not too strong, hold the nat in your hand awhile. The bluecoat schoolboys, formerly of Christ church, London, who wear the costume of Edward IV, go bareheaded the year round. They wear no hats in the coldest days of winter. They are remarkably healthy and have a redundant crop of hair, which lasts them

If we must wear a hat, let it be light in texture, and well ventilated from the top. One reason that women keep their hair longer than men is that their head gear allows of better ventilation. Business men enced by a British fam ly when it mi- sometimes wear their hats in their office, or grates from London to Cape Town; the some have a special hat which they put on. This is very injurious. The brokers on Wall street are noted for wearing their hats indoors as well as outdoors. They are notorious for having bald heads. This may account for it. A Plea for Ple.

It is the fashion to cry down pie and accuse it of causing all the dyspepsia in the country; but there is pie and pie, and good pie does not cause dyspepsia. It is, moreover, one of the most palatable dishes that can be set before a true and patriotic American. Emerson ate pie for breakfast all his life, and Carlyle never ate any. Yet, which was the dyspeptic? Go to, ye imitators of English clothes and French dishes! Ye can not abolish pie! The rich gold of the pumpkin, the bright canary of the custard, the carmine of the cherry, peeping through the demi-lunes of the flaky top crust, will still cheer the eye of the true American epicure when English and French fashions are gone out of style and though every bill of farein the country should become a carte de menu. -Cotton Mather Smith in the Epoch.
